Supermarkets review policy

Beef industry faces ruin as bans spread

BY CHARLES BREMNER IN BRUSSELS

THE beef industry was staring ruin in the face last night as the world boycott of British meat and cattle spread and the European Commission declared the unilateral bans by nine EU countries legal.

As prices continued to plummet at cattle markets, the Consumers' Association gave the starkest warning yet to people to stop eating beef products, and supermarkets urgently reviewed their buying and labelling policies.

MPs alarmed by the fallout from the announcement on Wednesday that "mad cow" disease might have been responsible for fatal brain illnesses in humans set up an inquiry into the handling of the affair and summoned ministers and health experts to give evidence next week.

We are not going to get Officials are working on the likely impact of a full-blown beef crisis, which could mean a return to the food mountains that caused such public anger in the 1980s. The EU is the world's second beef producer after the United States, accounting for nearly 15 per-cent of world output, and a crash in prices followed by a glut could impose a huge drain on the Common Agri-culture Policy because Brus-sels would be forced to buy excess supplies. Under the intervention rules, the larm authorities must buy up stocks if the price falls by about 20 per cent from its recent average - cattle prices were down by up to 28 per cent at some British markets yesterday.

THE TIMES Tory Euro-sceptics gathering for assault queued up to reject Malcolm

By Nichilas Wood CHIEF POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

EURO-SCEPTIC Tory MPs are organising their forces for another assault on the Government's European policy. They have secretly formed a new organisation to press for a tough line at the intergovernmental conference (IGC) on the future of Europe, which starts next

Their move will be regarded with alarm by John Major and moderate Cabinet ministers, who suffered badly at the hands of the sceptics during the Maastricht rebellion.

Bill Cash, one of the foremost opponents of the Government's European stance, is chairing the new body - the IGC Monitoring Group. The group, which has held two meetings attended by about 40

Conservatives, is acting as an umbrella body, helping to co-ordinate sceptic attempts to stiffen Mr Major's backbone in the IGC bargaining. Leading members of two other key factions - the 14-strong European

IRA dashes peace hopes by rejecting election plan

IREIAND CORRESPONDENT

The IRA dashed hopes of an imminent ceasefire yesterday when it rejected John Major's plans for elections in Northern Ireland as "unacceptable".

As the Irish National Liberation Army threatened a new campaign of violence in the wake of Mr Major's announcement, the IRA condemned the election proposals. Amid nationalist fury. a senior IRA source told BBC Radio Ulster that the plan did not have the "dynamic needed to carry all parties to meaningful peace negotiations free from all conditions".

Republicans believe that the Government and Unionists want to use elections to delay the start of all-party negotia tions in Northern Ireland. Sinn Fein, which described Mr Major's plan as "anathema to nationalists", said yesterday that it had lessened the chances of an IRA ceasefire.

Mitchel McLaughlin, Sinn Fein's chairman, who was speaking before the comments by the IRA source, said: "I believe that, in these circumstances, the arguments that would be necessary to con-vince the IRA leadership do not emerge. They are not

Gerry Adams will spell out Sinn Fein's objections at his party's annual conference in Dublin tonight. However, Sir Patrick Mayhew, the Northern Ireland Secretary, yesterday dismissed them. Also speaking on BBC Radio Ulster, Sir Patrick said: "I can see no reason why a party which claims to be democranic should wish to be deterred by elections ... which are a gateway through to the negoti-ations that they say they wanted to take part in for so

Sir Patrick also struck an upbeat note when he said that no party had said it would boycott the elections. He said: I'm encouraged to hear that nobody is saying as yet that they're not going to take part in the elections.

"Of course people in Northern Ireland want their politicians to sit down and negotiate." However, the INLA provided a stark reminder yesterday of the terrorist threat in Northern Ireland when it announced that it had placed its "units" on stand-by.

The terrorists said they would act "from a position of defence and retaliation". This was seen as a threat to the security forces and to loyalist paramilitaries if they break their ceasefire.

The republican terrorists, who have observed a de facto ceasefire since the IRA truce in August 1994, said: "We cannot look on idly as the British cynically draw out and fudge attempts at a negotiated settlement." However, the threat was also seen as an attempt by the INLA leadership to reassert its authority amid an internal feud which has claimed three lives.

David Trimble, the Ulster
Unionist leader, is expected today to call on the British and Irish governments to crack down on the IRA. In his first speech as leader to his party's annual meeting. Mr Trimble is likely to say that there is no prospect of the Republican movement committing itself to exclusively peaceful means and to insist that at the start of all-party talks on June 10 every political party must renounce violence, a principle of the Mitchell report.

And while the EU is equipped to sustain beef prices, there is no mechanism for the emergency relief of farmers who might be required to slaughter whole herds, officials said. British officials in Brussels said they would expect the EU to provide compensation.

While Commission officials were reviewing the crisis in Brussels yesterday, Britain's "mad cow" disease experts were meeting in private to answer the Health Secretary's key question: are children more at risk? Ministers have promised to accept the conse-guences of their answer, even WHO said it believed that the if it means the destruction of the entire national herd, and a Commons statement is expected on Monday.

Stephen Dorrell will also have to answer the Health and Agriculture select committees. which have set up a joint inquiry into the whole affair. The Agriculture Minister. Douglas Hogg, will be called, too, along with the Govern-ment's health, veterinary and scientific advisers.

The World Health Organisation's European Centre for Environment and Health is also calling for an immediate meeting of international experts to assess the public risks of "mad cow" disease, but controls imposed in Britain were adequate. Dr Lindsay Martinez, a specialist on emerging diseases, said there was still no proven link between the condition and Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in humans and the measures taken were prudent and effective.

Nevertheless, the Consumers' Association said the only guarantee of safety was to stop eating beef. Its director, Sheil McKechnie, said: There is currently an unquantifiable risk in eating beef. Consumers who want to avoid the risk of BSE have no choice but to cut out beef and beef products from their diet."

Tory MP in Labour row meets critics

THE Tory MP for Leominster. Peter Temple-Morris, rejected demands from some local party activists yesterday to stand down after claims that he was out of step with Conservative ideology.

One of the leading figures on the party's left, Mr Temple-Morris, attempted last night at a constituency association meeting to placate critics infuriated by a newspaper interview in which he suggested that, if he were entering politics now, he might join Labour or the Liberal Democrats. There was no attempt to deselect him.

Patients trusted doctor who used lover to falsify drug trial results

AND KATE ALDERSON

A FAMILY doctor who was ordered to be struck off the medical register yesterday was so trusted by patients and siaff that he was able to get away with his fraud for years. Geoffrey Fairhurs used his lover Debbie Barker, a research assistant, to falsify records for his lucrative drugs

Dr Fairhurst was finally caught out by David Edwards, the practice partner he used to bully, who reported his suspi-cions of fraud to the General Medical Council.

Dr Fairhurst's parients had such faith in him that they unquestioningly accepted his explanations for his occasional odd behaviour. Constance Jerram. 74, who was confined to a wheelchair, wondered why the general practitioner seemed so keen to take samples of her blood, but never doubted that he was puning her interests first.

"! iliought he was looking aher me. I didn't question him. I trusted him." Mrs Jerram, a widow who suffers from rheumajoid arthriris and chronic bronchitis, sold the disciplinary hearing.

"Dr Fairhurst never asked me to go into any trial or test."

Mrs Jerram said. Yet he apparently signed her up for trial of two drugs in 1993. Twice in a formight he took three phials of her blood.

I asked him if he was looking for something specific. He said not really. He said he was testing. That was the only time he said the word test." Mrs Jerram said. "The second time he took three more and the next visit I asked him if he Lad the results. He said,

Fairhurst: caught out by bullied partner

They're fine'. I never got to find out the results. He never showed me a consent form." Ms Barker admitted her former lover told her to put the wrong date on electrocardiogram records of patients taking part in drugs trials, "At the time I thought I would be the next Mrs Fairhurst," she

The ECGs had to be carried out on a specific date laid down as part of the trials. They were often carried out on other dates and she was told to backdate the records to make it look as if nothing was amiss.

To try to cover his tracks. Dr Fairhurst told a patient, Sandra Noble, that his colleague Dr Edwards was giving her husband Harry, 74, a poten-tially lethal drug. "I had known Dr Fairhurst for about 14 years. He had been a good doctor to me," Mrs Noble said. "He said that Dr Edwards had my husband on a study. I said is it dangerous and he said yes. He said Dr Edwards got paid for it. He said it was £500 I think. I said could it kill him and he said yes. I just went to pieces. I went home and woke my husband up to tell him about what was going on and to stop taking the Fairhurst was caught after the unrelated death of another patient. Dr Edwards told the hearing: Dr Fairhurst ap-peared to be carrying out his clinical trials in treatment time. The finances from this went solely into his private company.

"I had access to his consulting room which was next to mine but his research work was in separate offices which were kept locked upstairs. Following the death of one patient it became clear to me that patients were entered in clinical trials without informed consent."

In another attempt to cover the traces, Dr Fairhurst ordered Irene Hill, a practice nurse, to prepare fake electrocardiogram test results using a list of patients. "I did not appreciate I might have been doing something wrong," she said. "He was my boss and he told me to do it."

For ten years Dr Geoffrey Fairhurst was a member of the local medical ethics committee in St Helens and Knowsley,

Dr Bijoy Sinha, secretary of the local medical committee which nominated Fairhurst on to the ethics committee, said yesterday he was shocked at yesterday's finding. "I have known Dr Fairhurst for 20 years and I have always been struck by his professional integrity," he said. "That is one of the reasons he was elected on to the committee."

THE people of Deal in Kent, turned out in their thousands in the rain yesterday to bid an emotional farewell to the Royal Marioes who have been associated with the town for more than 135 years, With recollections of the IRA

On-spot fines if dogs fall foul of new law

By James Landale

OWNERS of dogs that foul public places face on-the-spot fines imposed by council workers under proposals approved by the Commons yesterday. Those who failed to pay within a fortnight could be fined up to £1,000 in court.

The Dogs (Fouling of Land) Bill, which is expected to becme law later this year, would allow councils to designate public areas as "messfree zones". It would be no defence for owners to say that they were unaware that a nuisance had been caused.

Al present, local authorities have to use bylaws to prose-cule offenders through the courts and are deterred by the cost. The current maximum

The Bill, which creates a national offence, passed its final stage unopposed in the Commons and goes to the Lords. A similar Bill failed in the Upper House last year after peers expressed fears that if could be used by councils to ban hunting on some land. The new Bill closes that louphole by outlining areas where the law would not apply. They include National farmland, woods, moors and commons.

Under bylaws, councils need permission from the Environment Secretary to designate areas and can face delays of several years. The Bill, which applies to England and Wales, allows councils to designate outdoor areas themselves. Although the law would apply to private land. it would not be enforceable without the owner's consent.

The Bill was welcomed by environmental groups and "pooper-scooper manufacturers. Sieve Roby, sales manager for Happy Pet Products, a said: Lois of people are cleaning up aher their dogs already, but this measure will catch people who have yet got round to douig so."

James Clappison, a junior Environment Minister, said the Bill would be welcomed by dog-owners "because they want to see and promote wing, where he recovered. He responsible dog-ownership".

Prosser is filmed being taken to the prison hospital

Prison suicide attempt blamed on TV film crew

BY ALEXANDRA FREAN, MEDIA CORRESPONDENT

THE governor of Dartmoor prison has accused a fly-onthe-wall television documentary crew of prompting a convicted murderer to an empt suicide in front of the cameras as a deliberate ploy to gain media exposure.

John Lawrence said he was convinced that Royston Prosser, who is serving a life sentence for murder, would not have risked his life by taking an overdose of para-celemol tablets had television cameras not been present to film the incident.

"It was a totally manipulative gesture on his part. He was clearly acting up for the cameras," Mr Lawrence said. Prosser was filmed stuffing the pills into his mouth for a minute and a half by a crew from the independent production company Two Four. He told them he would rather take his own life than agree to be transferred to Cardiff. Addressing the camera, he says: "I'm afraid I'm going have to take certain precautions now, I may have to take my own life ... I'm taking another 12 (tablets) now, alright? ... Some more. That's

THE LABEL ON A BOTTLE OF JACK DANIEL'S WHISKEY is for folks who aren't too impressed by labels.

Our label has always lacked color, dating to when Jack Daniel sold whiskey in the crocks up above. You see, our founder said what went in his bottle was more important than what went on it. And we still say that at our Tennessee distillery today. If your interest lies in a truly smooth sippin' whiskey, we recommend Jack Daniel's. # Jet-setting banker laundered cash to pay Nadir's debts

LAST night, as Elizabeth Forsyth was taken to Holloway Prison in London after being convicted on two counts of handling £400,000 of stolen money, she must have contem-plated how far she had fallen.

She might remember that fateful autumn day in 1989 when her Range Rover swept through the streets of Geneva. As a former banker to Saudi princes and other wealthy foreigners, she had walked around London carrying El million or more in cash and was used to the vagaries of the rich. She led a jet-set life, flitting between the UK, Switzerland and northern Cyprus in her role as personal adviser to Asil Nadir, mercurial founder of Polly Peck International (PPI).

Unusual requests were all part of the job Forsyth, then 50, had taken on in June 1987. She left her position looking after "high net worth" private customers at Citibank in Square, central London, where Mr Nadir was one of her clients. Part of the

She saw nothing improper in paying £310,000 in cash into a bank round the corner, nor in carrying £88,050 back to London in a briefcase. Mr Davies had given her a perfectly reasonable explanation for it all, but she could not recall what it was.

Clearly, the jury of seven women and five men did not believe Forsyth, who was found guilty by a majority of 11-1. The money was trans-ferred from PPI to Switzerland and sent back to the UK to settle Mr Nadir's private

THE Attorney-General is to consider the case of two Swissbased British businessmen who declined to give evidence in the case of Elizabeth Forsyth. Ian McNeil and Roger Leopard, directors of Rhone Finance in Geneva, were heavily criticised by the trial judge; Mr Justice Tucker. Reporting on the action was prohibited until the conclusion of proceedings against Mrs Forsyth. The trial was adjourned for lour days to allow Mr Leopard to attend and a live television link-up was provided in Geneva for Mr McNeil, who was said to be too ill to travel 10 Britain. David Calvert-Smith, for the Serious Fraud Office, was obliged to request a further adjournment, after receiving assurances that Mr Leopard would attend a day later than planned. Television studios were kept available for Mr McNeil at a cost of £20,000.

Mr Calvert-Smith then told the judge that Mr Leopard had taken advice from lawyers in Switzerland and been warned of undesirable consequences if he gave evidence. There was a fear that his answers might breach Swiss confidentiality laws, leaving him exposed to legal action. and further fears of "some sort of reprisal. Mr McNeil voiced similar concerns. Dr Carey, preaching at St Paul's Cathedral in London, said there were always limits to forgiveness. Those limits depended on the response of the offender.
Addressing the United

But you will note here how others cannot du the forgiving on behalf nf the one who has been wronged. It is the latter who first rebukes and then. subsequently, if repentance comes, may then forgive."

But perhaps too as Good Friday approaches we can sense afresh something of the desolation of Christ's death on the Cross. The death that brings justice and mercy together. Dr Carey said there was no future for any society with no values, "no sense of right and wrong, no concept of eternal truths and no awareness of God". He added: "If duty springs from the service we owe, then faith springs from the character of God." Faith was needed for a firm foundation of moral values.

Organic producers call for support as evidence emerges of BSE outbreaks in Europe

AGRICULTURE CORRESPONDENT

CATTLE farmers are facing a bleak future with consumer confidence in beef plummeting and foreign countries imposing bans to keep out what is seen as an irretrievably contaminated product.

The latest scientific findings, suggesting a causal link between bovine spongiform encephalopathy, "mad cow" disease, and a new strain of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, its human equivalent, have left many feeling that life and their finances will never be the same again.

Martin Burtt, the chairman of the National Farmers' Union's livestock comminee, said: "I am at my wits' end. It is getting to me personally. It is such a horrendous situation with no obvious light at the end of the tunnel."

On his 250-acre farm near Whitby in the North Yorkshire dales, Mr Burtt keeps 100 dairy cows from which he produces up to 70 calves for the beef trade every year.

Up to 20 per cent of my income comes from the calf sales," he said. "I cannot nature for the last 40 years, switch to arable farming because the land here is not suitable. I could expand my flock of 200 ewes, but you need an awful lof of sheep to replace income from beef. I would probably have to increase my flock by up to 30 per cent and I do not have enough land to sustain that number."

Lowland cattle farmers appear to have more choices. Ian Gardiner, the director of policy at the NFU, said: "Technically some could switch to arable farming, but new land coming into crops would not qualify for subsidies."

One group of farmers who believe they have an answer is Britain's small band of devotees of organic methods. They believe BSE is only one of many ills that can be attributed to the growing industrialisation of farming over the past

Patrick Holden, the chairman of the Soil Association, which represents the organic lobby, said: "BSE is the latest symptom of the breakdown of health in an industry whose practices have been violating Organic farming offers a way of restoring consumer confidence in food.

Organic farmers use no pestidices or artificial fertiliser. They stopped feeding all animal material to cattle, which are herbivorous by nature, 13 years ago. Had other farmers done the same, BSE might never have occurred; the disease is believed to have been caused by feed containing the scrapie-contaminated remains of sheep.

There are only 800 organic farmers in Britain, occupying less than I per cent of farmland. Mr Holden believes there is untapped demand for organic food and that far more farmers would supply it if the system of subsidies were not weighted in favour of conventional high-output farming.

"In some other countries much more support is given to organic farming", he said. "Austria now has 12 per cent of farmland being farmed organically. Here, over the past 15 months, £141,000 has been spent on helping farmers to switch to organic methods, compared with £2.2 billion in a single year on crop subsi-dies, livestock subsidies and

Hint of a smile in face of despair

By JOANNA BALE

THE question to Angela Browning, the junior Agricul-ture Minister, was delivered in a deadly serious tone, but even the most depressed beef farmer could not help but raise a wistful smile. A farmer from Cornwall rose from his seat and politely inquired: "When I was a teenager we used to take to the dancefloor full of Double Diamond, now they go on full of social drugs.

THE MINISTER

Could that be what is causing CJD in younger people?"

It was the first question in an hour-long emergency meeting with 500 farmers in Exeter and Mrs Browning's heart must have sunk. But, professional as ever, she replied: "I cannot say whether they have looked specifically at that as a causal base, but what I do know is that the CJD surveillance unit cannot identify what might make these people different to the others and it is because of this we have had 10 take cautionary steps,"

The audience of tweed-clad farmers in their Sunday best had travelled from all over the South West to a packed lecture theatre at Exeter University for the meeting, organised by the National Farmers Union. With a faint farmyard aroma lingering in the air, they listened attentively as the min-

at this stage, scientists thought only that their "may be a link" between BSE and the new strain of CJD. There was no concrete evidence, she said in reassuring tones, and the farmers remained defiant.

Time after time, the point was repeated in a variety of West Country accents: "There's no proof — it's just the media whipping up hyste-ria." But you could sense the

Britain is not only infected country

By MICHAEL HORNSBY AND PETER CAPELLA

BRITAIN is the only country to have had a serious epidemic of "mad cow" disease in its cattle herd, but other countries have also reported cases.

Switzerland has reported 206 cases since 1990, with 19 this year. France, Germany and Portugal, which have suspended imports of British beef, have also reported cases, although those in Germany involved animals imported from Britain.

The infected cattle abroad are presumed to have eaten the same kind of feed, containing scrapie-contaminated beef

The roast that made 'our soldiers brave and our courtiers good'

FOR more than 400 years of British history, roast beef dripping in its own deliclous juices was both a culinary and cultural icon. Now an old friend has been unmasked as a deadly foe, or so most of the world would have us believe.

Beef has inspired poets, play-wrights and authors from Shakespeare to Fielding, given us a name for the guardians of the Tower of London and fed generations of warriors. "Pudding and beef make Britons fight," wrote Matthew Prior

In the late 1980s Britain exported considerable amounts of such feed.

There has long been a suspicion that the incidence of BSE in France may be bigher than admitted. France is known to have imported British feed, but it is fed mainly to pigs and poultry. The high number of Swiss cases may be due to their diligence in looking for the disease.

It is possible that vets and farmers in other countries are failing to pick up the disease because they have had less practice in recognising it.

Bitter replay of the last big food scare

BY ANOREW PIERCE

THE number of cases of salmonella poisoning, which triggered a crisis in the British egg industry in 1988, has risen sharply after ministerial pledges to eradicate the bacterium. Despite a banery of environmental health regulations, the incidence of salmonella enteritidis, the strain prevalent in poultry, has increased virtually every year since the eggs flasco.

Food poisoning is at the highest level since records began in 1949, with $0,000 cases last year compared with 63,000 for 1992. The number of cases has risen fivefold over the last decade. An increase in eating out, takeaways and beefburger bars is thought Figures released by the Pub-lic Health Laboratory Service show that salmonella enteritidis remains as virulent today as in 1988. In 1987 there were 4,962 known cases. In 1988, the year the crisis erupted, the iotal had risen to 12,522 and it reached 17,000 in 1992. It eased back to 14,000 in 1994 and 12,500 last year. Figures for this year are expected to be around the same level.

Salmonella hit the headlines in December 1988 when Mrs Edwina Currie, a junior Health Minister, was asked to comment on a ban on the use of eggs in 25 Devon hospitals in response to previous government warnings. It was one fateful remark which brought her down: "We do warn people now that sadly most of the egg production in this country is infected with salmonella."

Stephen Dealler, a consultant macro-biologist, wished Mrs Currie had been in the Ministry of Agriculture. He said: The truth about BSE might have come out sooner. We have been here before. When the Government knew about salmonella in egg production they intially denied there was any infection. But they were forced on the defensive when Edwina Currie blurted out the truth."

The salmonella in eggs fias-co has disturbing parallels with the BSE affair. In 1988

there was a sustained public debate over the feeding methods of farm livestock. The consequences for the industry were devestating. In 1987 there were 15,608 egg producers; today the number has virtually halved to 8,979.

Andrew Oakley, the chair-man of the United Kingdom Egg Producers Association, said: "My life flashed in front of me when I heard about the BSE scare. Just like the beef producers, the first we knew about it was when we heard it from the media. But this is much more serious . . . '

Mrs Currie rejects assertions that the Government's handling of the BSE scare had been a public relations disaster, "Ministers have this time shared the information with the public ... They are much more open than they were eight years ago when I was in the firing line."

But Max Clifford, the public relations guru, thought the last week had been the biggest disaster since salmonella. "It is a catastrophe. They are helping to destroy yet another British institution: the Sunday

The ale was brewed in the monastery with natural spring water drawn from its own well. Today we're still drawing water from the same source for our own Abbot Ale. And while most other beers are fermented for just three or four days, Abbot is fermented slowly for a full seven ('Blessed by the Sabbath') to give it a rich, deep flavour.

Many have declared it to be one of the finest real ales around. And even, on occasions, the ne plus ultra.

By Philip Webster, political editor

ALF MORRIS, a leading of Britain's 6.5 million dis- Counsellor for 18 years and campaigner in postwar politics, announced last night that would retire from Parliament at the next general election.

He said: "I had thought and hoped that the next election would come sooner. But as this Parliament could now go its full term and the next promises to do so as well. He played a key role in the anempts to compensate the victims of Thalidomide, to improve war widows pensions, to assist those harmed in the Barlow Clowes scandal and to help haemophiliaes infected with HtV and hepantis C from contaminated NHS blood products.

His most abiding legacy, however, will be the transfor-

Most Jews will reject the notion of Hell as inconsistent with reason and faith. Judaism teaches firmly that our jurisdiction does not extend beyond the grave. We must place our trust in God as the final judge. And hating the dead is a self-destructive exercise.

On the other hand, loving the dead and hoping that there will be compensation for their suffering in an eternal afterlife is one of the comforts offered by faith in a world after the Holocaust and the genocides that have mass graves of our time.

Today religion cannut afford to bolster its ethical teachings with a package of rewards. Judaism has always been firm in its teachings that a "mitzvah", a good deed, begets another one and that an evil action becomes its own punishment. Immoriality can and will be a comfort to us in our flawed and suffering lives: but it should not be linked to our moral actions. There must be more to life than a short moment of awareness. We do not want to be rewarded with immortality, but we do need almost infinite time to come to terms with improving the world and ourselves. ## Judge will decide on the right to end life

By JEREMY LAURANCE

DOCTORS treating a woman who has been in a persistent vegetative state for more than four years have been told they may apply to a judge for permission to withdraw artificial feeding and allow her to

In the first case of its kind in Scotland, five senior judges at the Court of Session in Edinhurgh ruled yesterday that Lord Cameron of Lochbroom could make the decision whether to end Janet Johnstone's life. The doctors at whether Law Hospital, Carluke, Strathelyde, are supported by Mrs Johnstone's family.

The judges said that Lord Cameron's ruling would cover the doctors only against the civil law and not against criminal prosecution. That could be provided only by a public statement by the Lord Advocate. Lord Mackay of Drumadoon, Scotland's senior law officer. He said he would make a statement.

The case has added to confusion over people in a persistent vegetative state after details emerged this week of a parient who allegedly recovered awareness after seven years. At one stage hospital staff considered applying to the High Coun to have his arrificial feeding withdrawn, but when he was transferred to the Royal Hospital for Neurodisability in Putney, southwest London. staff there realised that he was able to communicate,

In a second case a braindamaged musician, Geoffrey Wildsmith, 21, told police through a computer that he was attacked on a late-night train nearly two years ago.

The Royal College of Physicians issued the first clinical guidelines on the condition yesterday, but said that they may already be out of date.

The guidelines say that a diagnosis should be made only when a patient has been in a continuing vegetative state for more than 12 months after a head injury, or six months after other causes of brain damage. A vegetative state is one in which a patient has cycles of eye closure and opening which may simulate sleep and waking but who shows no awareness of self or

Hidden treasure: the massive sketch of Jupiter and Semele found in the King's Drawing Room when the oval panel by William Kent was removed from the celing

Spring clean puts art experts in the picture

ARTS CORRESPONDENT

A MASSIVE, previously unknown 1720s line drawing has been discovered under an oval ceiling canvas in the King's Drawing Room at Kensingtoo Palace. It was oocovered when the panel that had covered it for more than two centuries - a depiction of Jopiter appearing to Semele — was removed for extensive cleaming.

Both images are the work of William Kent (1685-1748), the architect and interior designer, who painted caovases in various parts of the palace. In removing the panel, curators were taken aback to find that the sketch is an almost exact replica of the caovas, except for a yapping spaniel added to the final

Nigel Arch, director of the state apartments at Kensington Palace which boast a collection of Van Dvcks and Tintorettos - said curators assumed that the artist was trying out the scale of the canvas. Otherwise, he suggested, he was planning to paint on to the plaster.

Curators had no idea what was hidden behind Kent's painted ceiling at Kensington Palace but decided it was easier to paint at ground level and then attach the work to the ceiling.

Mr Arch said that Kent displayed acute business acumen in securing the commission. Professor Bailey said the brightness of Hyakutake named after the amateur Japanese astronomer who first saw it, meant that everyone in Britain should be able to see it "inching" across the horizon. He said binoculars would be worth taking to comet-watching parties to help to distinguish between the head and

Day of rest turns into a hagglers' paradise

By Nick Nuttall environment correspondent

CAR boot sales, where cash is king and haggling the order of the day, are transforming the

In the first academic study of the phenomenon, researchers have found that mure than a million people every weekend are shunning the piped music and security cameras of the shopping arcade in favour of the carnival atmosphere of the car boot sale.

Unlike the superstore, car boot sales offer "an excursion into curiosity and discovery. It is both a potential impromptu antiques fair and a jumble sale. Quite simply one just does not know what one might find there," said the report, which was funded by the Government's Economic and Social Research Council.

Haggling for goods, providing the thrill of pitting wits against canny salesmen. emerged as a main reason for the popularity of sales. The average buy costs E8.

They attract people of all ages and social class, the researchers claim. About 40 per ceni of those who go are employed "scotching the myth that the car boot sale is the preserve of recessionary Brit-ain's underclass", the report

Car boot sales are also increasingly important for the environment as goods get recycled, it is claimed. But the study says that the essence of these sales is under threat that trading standards are being flouted and that business is being sucked from council-owned markets and malls. "However, any attempt to regulate them will kill off one of their principal attractions, namely their carnival spirit and lack of conventionality", the report's authors. Dr Nicky Gregson of the University of Sheffield and Dr Louise rewe of the University of Noningham, say, in many areas the Sunday morning landscape of Britain has been transformed. Fields, stadia, school playgrounds and car parks are taken over by row upon row of cars and by hordes of potential buyers."

The study, based on a survey of 300 buyers and sellers in Nottinghamshire, South Yorkshire and the northeast of England, shows that sellers make £90 on average, but in some cases up to £800 at weekends.

The most popular purchases are children's clothes. followed by DIY equipment, videos, baby equipment, kitchen utensils and records.

In a separate survey, the researchers found a growing mood among councils to regu late the fairs. Of 350 local authorities questioned, many are considering ways to make organisers obtain planning permission while others may charge high licensing fees.

The Findhorn Foundation, near Forres, Grampian, has become known as the "Vatican of the New Age" whose alternative vision attracts 11.000 people each year from across the world. ## Heaney is fêted in France

Paris: Seamus Heaney, the Nobel prize-winning Irish poet, was made a Commander of the Order of Arts and Letters yesterday and praised as a vital cultural link in Ireland's divided society (Ben Macintyre writes).

Presenting him with the award, Philippe Douste-Blazy, the French Culture Minister, said that Mr Heaney had "grown up be-tween unionists and nationalists, defining yourself as part of both worlds, which remain irreconcilable, a cause of spilt blood even now. Speaking in French, the 56-year-old poet said that when he was given the Nobel prize in December he was "walking on air". With the latest honour, "that walk continues".

"This is a sort of benedic-tion." Mr Heaney said, adding that as the former bome of Irish writers such as Oscar Wilde, James Joyce and Samuel Beckett, France was "a haven for Irish artists".

Yeltsin wins open * support from US

FROM RICHARD BEESTON IN MOSCOW

THE Clinton Administration dropped any pretence at impartiality in Russia's forthcoming presidential elections yesterday when Warren Christopher, the US Secretary of State, gave an unsubtle plug for President Yeltsin's re-election campaign.

Speaking at a press conference after meeting the Russian leader in the Kremlin, Mr Christopher left title doubt that Washington will be using all its weight to help President Yeltsin to stay in power against a strong challenge from Gennadi Zyuganov, the Communist Party leader and front-runner in the polls.

"I am sure that President Clinton will come here to follow basically the line that he has followed ever since the beginning of his presidency. and that is to support the reforms and support those who are enthusiastic about reform and those who are carrying out reforms," Mr Christopher said. "That has brought him into strong support for President Yeltsin on prior occasions." Although there had been concerns that Mr Christopher would find himself at odds with the Kremlin over Nato's expansion plans, the Americans and Russians clearly decided to put their differences on hold for the time being. Instead, the two sides concentrated on areas of agreement, such as fighting terrorism, pursuing arms control deals and laying the groundwork for a summit, planned for Moscow next month, of the G7 group of industrialised nations to discuss nuclear safety. Mr Christopher's words of support came after similar remarks made in Moscow recently by Helmut Kohl, the German Chancellor, and the pro-Yeltsin Chirac Govern-ment in France, Although President Yeltsin is trailing Mr Zyuganov in the polls. Western powers appear to have decided to back him as

China-America rift Widens as Taiwan prepares to vote

From James Pringle in pering and Tom Rhooes in washington

THE presence of two American aircraft carrier groups off Taiwan - with the USS Nimite expected to arrive this weekend - has complicated Peking's calculations in the crisis in the Taiwan Strait. Although neither China nor the United States are seeking a direct confrontation, their relations plummeted further last night after the scheduled visit to Washington by the Chinese Defence Minister was postponed. In a sign of the steady decline in dialogue between the two sides, both claimed to have made the decision to suspend next month's visit by General Chi Haosian, who was to have foured US millitary installations,

The Pentagon said that William Perry, the Defence Secretary, had determined that "a large-scale official visit was not appropriate in the present climate. China's Xinhua news agency also took the

Six miles proves to be too far for peace

FROM JONATHAN MIRSKY IN QUEMOY

TWO days ago Chen Siyang and five other county council lors from Quemoy decided to visit Xiamen, just six miles across the narrow Taiwan Strait which separates them from mainland China.

They wanted to explain to their Chinese neighbours, who once regularly shelled their island, that they wanted peace. However, they were firmly rebuffed and Mr Chen now says: "Everyone on this little island sees what a bully China really is."

To travel six miles - the mainland is clearly visible from their island - Mr Chen and his colleagues first had to fly to Hong Kong via Taipei. and then to Xiamen, thought they'd turn us away. This wasn't an act. We wanted to show them Quemoy's love of peace. What we got was cruel, ruthless behaviour."

Many of the fields here are studded with tall cement columns topped with sharp metal points, intended to impale mainland paratroops. Towers stand at crossroads with soldiers on top manning antiaircraft machineguns. Tanks stand under trees. Soldiers from the 30,000-man garrison are digging trenches in the red clay and there are hundreds of miles of tunnels crisscrossing the island in which troops can shelter for months. # Mandela urges halt to KwaZulu violence

PRESIDENT MANDELA yesterday called for a new strategy to combat policial violence dropped after the political violence in KwaZulu/Natal after the massacre of 11 people highlighted the fragility of recent peace initiatives in the province.

Gunmen attacked two rural homesteads in Donnybrook in the KwaZulu/Natal Midlands on Thursday night, shooong dead seven women and three men. A two-monthold baby died after being smothered by one of the victims.

Police have confirmed the motive for the attack was political: all teo adults were supporters of the African National Congress. Since the mid-1980s, members of the Zulu-dominated Inkatha Freedom Party and ANC have fought a war in the province, first democratic elections in 1994 but have risen again recently

Observers have noted the connecoon between political events and political violence. The massacre in Donnybrook occurred a few hours after Mr Mandela launched the ANC's campaign for the May local government elections in the province. The polls had to be postponed last November because of disputes over district boundaries, and the latest killings may be a foretaste of violence in the run-up to the elections.

The ANC yesterday called for more troops to be sent to the province. The party has pointed fingers at Inkatha and Zulu traditional chiefs, suggest-elections, Mr Mandela said there was still a tendency among different population groups to think in terms of race. "We still have powerful elements in this country planning every day to overthrow this Government." he said.

Police Commissioner George Fivaz said it was inconceivable that the post-apartheid force could seek to overthrow the Government. The new force was "absolutely committed to the new democratic order".

ing a political strategy under way to disrupt the election. An Inkatha spokesman said the province could expect trouble from both sides.

While security efforts have made important strides in advancing the peace campaign, on a political level the picture is not rosy. A week ago, Mr Mandela was booed by the province's chiefs when he suggested at a meeting that Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi, the Inkatha leader, should not be elevated above the Zulu King. Plans to set a date for broader peace talks fell by the wayside as the two sides failed to find common ground.

Inkatha has recently made efforts to undermine the influence of King Goodwill Zwelithini. Chief Buthelezi. who wants virtual autonomy for KwaZulu/Natal, draws much of his support from powerful tribal chiefs. Last April he stormed out of negotiations over the constitution, and often uses language that critics say incites violence. Behind this lies inkatha's concerns that the ANC is making inroads in the province, particularly among the less traditionalist youth.

President Mandela announced yesterday that he had met his ministers of Safety and Security, Justice and Defence to consider a new strategy to deal with violence.

Villagers rescue Briton in Somalia

By JAMES BONE

BRITON and four colleagues abducted in Somalia were freed by armed local villagers who heard about the kidnapping on the BBC World Service, United Nations officials said vesterday.

William Condie, a Unicel security officer from Hereford, was seized with four UN officials from Nepal, India. Sudan and America while waiting for a flight out of Somalia on Thursday.

The UN ream, which was making its weekly three-day visit to the war-torn country. was surrounded by about ten armed men at the Balidogle airport, 56 miles southwest of Mogadishu. UN sources say the kidnappers were led by a disgruntied contractor named Omar Dini Hosh, from whom Unicef had hired vehicles. The UN agency cancelled the carhire contract last week after paying off Mr Hosh. He decided that he wanted more compensation and abducted the UN team in retaliation.

The area around the Balidogle airport, now Somalia's principal port of entry, is controlled by General Muhammad Farrah Aidid, the warlord who led an uprising against UN peacekeepers in 1993 and effectively forced them out of the country.

As soon as the local authorities heard of the kidnapping, they called for residents to intercept the armed men and free the UN staff. The people of a village about 20 miles from the town of Qoryooley heard about the incident on a BBC radio broadcast and set out to save Mr Condie and his companions.

At least one boy was wounded in the ensuing gun battle late on Thursday, but the five UN staff were rescued unharmed. They spent the night in a UN vehicle that had set out to find them and were expected to return to Nairobi

Those abducted with Mr Condie were Ismail el-Azhari, Nasim Ahmed, Deen Kaphle and Robert Hagan.

Britain frees Kenya aid

FROM SAM KILEY IN NAIROBI

KENYA yesterday ended its pariah status among donor nations as Britain gave its seal of approval for Nairobi's economic recovery plan and re-leased £5 million in aid that had been frozen since 1994: Britain's approval is likely to encourage other donors to release £385 million, also pledged in 1994, to help Nairobi soften the blow of a World Bank economic restructuring programme. The seven biggest donors, including Britain, met Kenyan officials in Paris yesterday. Donors have been concerned that President Moi would renege on pledges to liberalise the economy. Moreover, about £327 million in aid money vanished from the treasury. The current plan calls for privatisation of state-owned companies, civil service cuts and an anti-corruption drive.

The country has got to the stage where patients are sleeping three to a bed in hospitals without drugs and schools are short of books.

Jackson mobilises protests against Oscars 'race bias'

FROM GILES WHITTELL IN LOS ANGELES

JESSE JACKSON, the civil rights activist is planning demonstrations in cities across America during Monday's broadcast of the Oscars ceremony to draw attention tu the fact that only one of the 166 Academy Award nominees is black.

Taking his cue from an 11page report in last week's People magazine accusing Hollywood of institutionalised racism". Mr Jackson held long meetings with show business leaders on Thursday, threatening to picket television stations that will be broadcasting the Oscars ceremony.

The report came as a severe embarrassment to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, which administers the awards and considers itself a paragon of political correctness and public rela-tions knowhow. Blacks make up 9 per cent of the American population and, as enthusiastic filmgoers, 25 per cent of the nation's cinema audience. However, fewer than 200, or 3.9 per cent, of the 5.043 academy members who vote on the Oscars, are African-American, the magazine

Mr Jackson, apparently unaware of the discrepancy unol the article was published, has leapt into the fray with vigour. "ft doesn't stand to reason that; if you are forced to the Three celebrities who will be acting happy, however awkward they may feel underneath, are Oprah Winfrey. Whoopi Goldberg and the producer Quincy Jones, all blacks with prominent roles in the broadcast but all attending as hosts rather than contenders. In what appears to be a strenuous effort to compensate for blacks' under-representation among nominees, the academy changed producers for the broadcast for the first

Jones to replace Gilbert Cates.

David Letterman's widely criticised performance last year. Ms Winfrey, the talkshow host, will announce the nominees' arrival to a worldwide television audience of about a billion. Notable performances by

First Lady replies to inquiry on. sackings

HILLARY CLINTON yesterday released carefully worded written answers to 26 questions posed by congressmen investigating the dismissal in 1993 of the seven-member White House Travel Office.

In sworn testimony that contradicted a series of subpoenaed White House memorandums, she insisted that she had "no decision-making role" in the dismissals. She repealedly claimed an inability tu recall particular conversations during what she called a "busy and stressful rime", and several times suggested that aides had misconstrued her remarks about the Travel Office. The White House released the answers just too late to be covered in Thursday's evening news.

Six of the seven employees were reinstated. The seventh was tried for fraud but acquitted. Evidence later emerged to suggest that an old Arkansas friend of the Clintons had pushed for the dismissals because he wanted the Travel Office business.

New York dog's life is envy of the poor

FROM QUENTIN LETTS IN NEW YORK

NEW YORKERS spend as scriptions to pet magazines much oo their pet dogs as the average Third World country gains from its trade exports. New figures suggest that the Manhattan dog lover last yar paid more than $5,000 (£3,200) each on Butch, generating $f billion in business for the pet trade and matching the foreign trade earnings of

The minimum annual cost of keeping a dog in New York was estimated by the American Kennel Club yesterday at $f.250, which covered food, veterinary bills, grooming, basic training and treats (bedding, toys, chocolate drops and fashion items).

Few owners do without the services of a dog walker, who exercises your pet while you are at work. At $15 a day, five times a week for 50 weeks a year, this added $3,750.

On top of these costs can be added the price of kennelling dogs during holidays, subsuch as Dogue and Vanity Fur, entry fees for social events such as next month's 1.500-dog "pooch picnic", plus the expense of proper

Bashkim Dibra, a selfstyled "dog trainer to the stars", said yesterday that he had known New Yorkers who had spent more than $15,000 on educating a dog.

Mr Dibra, whose clients have included the hounds of the actresses Kim Basinger and Kathleen Turner, said: "Dog ownership is all about four-legged therapy. In a city like New York you need unconditional fove, and that is what dogs provide." Robin Hoik, of the Ameri-can Kennel Club, said that, as with other household essentials, dog food and veterinarians cost more in New York. Animal behaviourists in central Manhattan charge as much as $500 an hour.

Steamy trailer ban puts 'Last Tango' director in a spin

FROM RICHARD OWEN IN ROME

THE film director Bernardo Bertolucci, whose Last Tango in Paris was banned in Italy 20 years ago, has again failen foul of the censors, this time over a tale of adolescent seduction in Chiantishire.

State television announced yesterday that it was refusing to show advertisements for Bertolucci's latest film, I Dance Alone, starring the American actress Liv Tyler. Set in Tuscany, the film revolves around the seduction of the 18-year-old Tyler by an older man, played by Jeremy Irons, at an English-owned villa near Siena.

In the scene which gives the film its title. Irons dives naked into the pool and calls out to Tyler: "Haven" you ever made love?", to which she replies: "I dance alone."

The film will be released in Italy next week, and is to be shown at the next. Cannes Film Festival. But a spokesman for RAL the state-run televisioo network, said the trailer was "too hot to handle", even for the late evening.

An infuriated Bertolucci said he would leave Italy altogether. He was "deeply bewildered and dismayed". not least because the Italian Board of Censors had praised the film on first viewing for "the delicacy with which it portrayed the young heroine's sexual initiation"

Bertolucci said the row revived painful memories of his "suffering and humiliation" over Last Tango in Paris, when he was given a two-month suspended prison sentence and deprived of the right to vote for five years. The refusal to advertise was absurd given that no one from RAI had seen the film. Italian television authorities are tightening up on

standards after a row this week over a bizarre commercial for Volkswagen. The advert showed an elderly man running a pocket knife along the side of a smart red Golf.

Pierangelo Sardi, the head of the Italian Psychologists' Association, said it was beyond belief that an act of vandalism was used to sell cars when it was far more likely to encourage street crime.

The Pope has also stepped into the controversy over television standards, urging Catholics not to watch television at all if possible during Lent because too many images were "degrading to women" and otherwise encouraged debased values.

The Vatican said that the Pope would take the offensive during Holy Week by producing a 45-second "commercial" of his own depicting him reciting the rosary in Latin.

ot often do I feel sorry for anybody called Gummer. But I must put in a feelingful word for dear Peter Gummer, brother of our burger munching Environment Secre-tary, John. This week, Peter was appointed chairman of the Royal Opera House, and has received a distinctly sniffy press for his pains. This is chiefly because, as Covent Garden's boss, he will be spending the very same lottery dosh (£55 million to be exact. plus the odd £20 million of "exes") that he awarded to the Royal Opera when he headed the Arts Council's lottery panel. Should we be worried by this? Indeed. There is clearly a deplorable shortage of Gummers to fill Britain's top jobs. More must be brought into operation as soon as

House development last year,

But as for the tittle-tattle of troublemakers who elaim Gummer's appointment to be another instance of an Establishment

Now here's a test of public relations carve-up - well, what paranoid nonsense! If Gummer feels any conflict of interests at all, it will surely be with his other job. As boss of the big PR firm. Shandwick he pmbably works on the assumption that good publicity is preferable to bad. At Covent Gummer may alsu find that he has inherited the ghastliest job in London. Let us consider what he has to do if the ill-fated opera house development is finally to rise from the drawing-board. First he has to oe up a number of tiny but nevertheless irritating loose ends in the ROH's planning application, which seems to be progressing with all the speed of a gnat through treaele.

Garden, of course, they operate on the opposite principle.

Then he must smarm up to the richest people in London - the Sainsburys, and of course the Morrisons — and sweet-talk them out of the £50 million of private funding that he needs to proceed with the development. Then he must find a way of sacking half the orchestra, the opera chorus and most of the stage hands in such e way that the rest don't walk out in sympathy - because he needs at least some staff to maintain a semblance of activity during

Always assuming, of course, that he has found a temporary venue in which the skeleton opera company can perform. The ROH board has had about ten years to think about this one, so it clearly has a brilliant scheme all worked out ... it just doesn't want to tell anybody what the plan is yet. Then comes the really exciting

bit. Gummer must don his hard hat, put on his gruffest "don't mess with me, sonny" voice, and talk deadlines and penalty clauses with the gentlemen of the building

ROH development up and run-ning within five years of its estimated finishing date, he will be doing considerably better than the last two culture palaces built in London: the Barbican Centre (ten years late) and the British Library (your guess is as good as mine). Meanwhile, of course, he will need to find tenants for all the retail outlets and office space that the ROH must rent out if it is to pay off the remaining £50 million cost of the scheme. Tricky? Well. let's put it this way: if offered the choice I would rather try selling British beef in Paris. But cometh the hour, cometh the Gummer. I am sure that the words "fall-guy" or "poisoned chalice" have never entered his mind.

In return, he receives no salary and won't even be able to run up an enormous champagne account in the Crush Bar, because the theatre will be closed. But there will be one deeply satisfying perk. As chairman, he can be thoroughly unpleasant to Mr Keith Cooper, the ROH's "director of corporate affairs", whose views on the shortcomings of his own colleagues are now so well known to BBC TV viewers. The joy of putting "beastly Keithy" through the mangle will surely compensate for all the other hassles of the job.

Britain's public libraries want to celebrate the millennium — and, incidental ly, their own 150th anniversary by putting an Internet terminal in every library by the year 2000. To this end the Library Association this week submined a E45 million bid for lottery money, and a cheery

PR lady from the LA has written to me asking if I would consider doing an article about "the role of librarians as information navigators for the new century". Gosh. Beam me up, Lord Jenkins, as we say in the Reading Room at the BM. I have no objection to my local library wiring itself to the informaoon superhighway. The people of Hendon have long been clamouring for an efficient means of exchanging Robin Williams fanclub e-mail with the citizens of Wisconsin. I just wonder where in the library they are going to put the terminal — what with the video checkout, the coffee bar, the man selling stamps, the council-tax arrears advice desk, the passportphoto booth, the bouncy castle, and of course the babysitting bureau. The only answer is to get rid of all those shelves of dusty old things with boring print inside, What did they used to be called? Hang on, I'll consult an information navigator.

If you read the play, you cannot doubt that Mary is far more of a heroine than, say, her counterpart in Robert Bolt's retelling of the story in Vivat, Vivat Reginal. But this is a conclusion hard to reach at the National, and for a most banal reason, A French actress, Isabelle Huppert, plays cannot cope with Jeremy Sams's graceless translation. Mary Stuart, who came to Scotland from France in 1561 and lived in Britain for 25 years, speaks our language half as comprehensibly as the French ambassador. That was scarcely Schiller's aim, though he did take liberties with the facts. As Stephen Spender pointed out, the play is e poetie myth that happens to involve British historical characters. The wonderful scene at its centre, in which Elizabeth and Mary meet and quarrel, never occurred. But it does not quite occur at the National either, for Huppert rises to a climax in which words such as "bastard" and "impostor" flash out of a rush of dropped vowels and blurred syllables, like lamps in an engulfing fog.

Importing Huppert was a bold act, and there are times when the risk comes off. Though her habit of pointing her finger or punching the air suggests weakness, not majesty, the ample gestures and fullblooded movements of French tradition contrast tellingly with the uptight body-lan-guage of Elizabeth's court. Even if you cannot always understand ber.

and her emotions sometimes seem external, Mary emerges as generous and outgoing, freer in her cage at Fother-inghay than Elizabeth in her palace: which is the very comparison Schiller wanted. The evening's big success is undoubtedly Massey's Virgin Queen, who spends it wanting and encouraging Mary's death, yet trying to offload responsibility for it on anything and anyone. But is she merely a Nero who wants to be thought an Augustus, as Schiller seems to suggest? Massey's answer is yes and no. She also exudes melancholy and yearning for love,

Royal rumpus: Isabelle Huppert as Mary Stuart confronts Anne Massey as Elizabeth I in Schiller's Mary Stuart

plus a sardonic anger, very text, at a world that seems to demand she be woman, wife, man and tyrant all at once.

Massey begins by looking like the Elizabeth in the National Portrait Gallery, pale and flame-haired in her jewelled finery, and ends crouched on her throne, sour wizened and alone. This is the final image of the play, which is just as well, for the execution preceding it is an anticlimax. We should feel that Mary's frank confession contrasts eloquently Lyttelton with Elizabeth's moral shilly shallying, and we should be moved by her death. But how can a spectator let his feelings go when he is struggling to make sense of Esperanto?

take and so, on the whole, is William Oudley's set, which shunts Claude landscapes and odd geometric patterns round the stage. There are effective supporting performances from Paul Jesson as an implacable Burleigh, Ben Miles as a Sturm und Drang hero who wants simultaneously to rape and rescue Mary, and (espe-cially) Tim Pigott-Smith as a city-slicker Leicester, but Howard Davies's production lacks urgency. Where is the excitement of ideas, politics and raw human conflict? Nowhere much. BENEDICT NIGHTINGALE

BASE NOTES

SOME of the most famous names in the world of music and dance were honoured this week at the Evening Standard Awards. The pianist Alfred Breodel, the soprann Anja Silja and the Kirov ballerina Altynai Asylmuratova all won awards for outstanding performances in Britain in 1995. The top prize for a dance production went to Siobban Davies's Art of Touch, and the chosen opera production was Graham Vick's King Arthur at Covent Garden. For the second year in a row, the London Symphnoy Orchetra was named best music ensemble, and Lord Meouhin received a special award.

 ASPIRING actors are pre-paring to tread the boards at the 41st National Student Drama Festival . which takes place in Scarborough from Wednesday to April 3. The festival includes 17 productions as well as countless workshops and masterclasses all under the patronage of playwright Alan Ayckbourn.

The organisers claim that their festival has helped more than 600 students, from Alan Yentob to Ben Elion, into the entertainment world. It pays tribute, once again, to Buzz Goodbody, the first female director of the Royal Shakespeare Company, who died in 1975 just after directing Ben Kingsley in Homlet. She was plucked from obscurity at the 1966 National Student Festival: her talent was noticed by John Barton, who invited her to be his assistant at the RSC.

Apart from the annual award in her name, for the most outstanding young director, this year's festival will promote a new award in her memory: Queenswood, a lead-ing independent girls' school in Hertfordshire, will launch a Buzz Goodbody Fellowship, to enable a talented young director to work at the school for a year. In return for free board, lodging and an honorarium. he or she will help to develop drama at the school, including producing a play.

All events are open to non-Andents. Festival box office: 01723 365068 or, until tomorrow, 01782 749049.

The collector's collector of its own that makes it not just good but great. That this mysterious chemistry should be present in the British Museum's current exhibition on Sir William Hamihon is surprising but palpably true. I could analyse at length the factors that have brought this about: the infectious enthusiasm of the curators: their appetite for detective work; the high quality of the loans: the lack of inhibitions in mixing ideas with exhibits, science with art: the character of Sir William himself: and an installation that evokes the late 18th century in an entirely unpompous way, are all con-

yourself this beguiling and stimulating gem of a show. Sir William Hamilton took up the post of British envoy at the court of the Bourbon King Ferdinand IV of Naples in 1764 without any great ambi-tions for a diplomaóc career. Lacking fortune or title, he concentrated instead on establishing a reputation for himself as a man of "virtu" through collecting art and anniquities, publishing his collections, entertaining the many Grand Tourists and artists passing through Naples and minutely recording the Royal Society. Vesuvius was more active in the second half of the 18th century than at any time since antiquity or afterwards and Sir William was near by for the three violent eruptions of 1767, 1779 and 1794. The evocative scenes that he commissioned from local artists convey the drama of the pall of smoke by day and the glowing orange of the night sky.

most beautiful places in Europe. A panoramic view by Giovanni Batrista Lusieri, 27 metres long and painted from the balcony of Hamilton's Palazzo Sessa, shows it in all its limpid seductiveness, and in such detail that you can pick out Hamilton's seaside retreat, the Villa Emma, on the far side of the bay.

This was also when the first major finds were being brought up from the excavations of Pompeii and Herculaneum. Sir William promptly started his first collection of antiquities. In selling these to the British Museum in 1772 he revolutionised the character of that institution - until then a repository of the natural sciences - and put it on the path to becoming a showcase for art and antiquities.

The recovery of Hamilton's scattered collections of Greek painted vases, gold jewellery, cameos, gemstones, Old Master and contemporary paintings, bronzes and sculpture is dumped on Hamilton by his nephew Charles Greville. whose mistress she had been. In tackling the delicate task of establishing a role for her in Neapolitan society, Hamilton had the idea that Emma should pose as classical statues - she had already posed for Romney in London, Her metamorphosis from one character into another, with three cashmere shawls for props, became one of the tourist sights of Naples, Among the drawings and paintings of her, including those by Romney and Reyn-olds, the most enchanting is by Elisabeth Vigee-Le Brun, who sketched her uppurned face onto one of the doors at the Villa Emma with a stick of charcoal taken from the fire.

To resurrect Sir William as a benefactor to the nation, a connoisseur and man of taste who aimed to raise standards of design and art in Britain is one of the aims of this exhibition. Most successfully of all, it evokes the enormous excitement of living at the end of the 18th century, when so many branches of knowledge were at their very beginnings and the arts were enthusiastically classical Greece and Rome.

A chorus of approval

hope nobody thinks they have joined the Bach Cheir to sing Bach, remarked the choir's former director, Reginald Jacques, many years ago. Sir David Willcocks, who took over Jacques's post in 1960 and announces his refrement tomorrow, could not have put it better. For the legacy he leaves the Bach Choir is precisely that vast diversity of repertoire - plus the high standards demanded by the man who was simultaneously turning the choir of King's College. Cambridge, into one of the world's most formidable musical institutions.

The diversity is probably just as well. Willcocks can remember the King of Norway catching up on two hours sleep in a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass during a tour at the beginning of his tenure with the Bach Choir. But the fact that the singers were in Norway at all. and performing to such a distinguished audience, reflects the ambition that Willcocks had for the choir. Previously it had never ventured outside London: indeed, it gave only seven concerts a year. Now they number 20, and the choir has undertaken 17 foreign tours and produced a formidable collection of recordings.

The progress of the Bach Choir mirrors what Willcocks believes to be a general improvement of standards in the choral field. "Recordings have made a great deal of difference," he says, "People have come to expect as good a sound in a concert as they hear on a CD. But another factor is the blossoming of so many years - it means that new standards are set and as a large, amateur choir we have no fight to compete with small-er, specialist ones."

But however many specialist groups there are, the Bach Choir has managed to achieve an enviable reputation of being committed to the performance of new works without being pigeonholed for focusing exclusively on contempo-rary music. The most recent venture has been to work closely with the Polish composer Penderecki,

If the Bach Choir is amaleur in status, Willcocks has erased any tendency for it to be "amateurish" in approach. "I did not set out to change things, but in fact they have, Willcocks says. When he arrived the Bach Choir needed to import professional tenors to "stiffen" its ranks. That would not be necessary today.

The making of an island nation

Jonathan Mirsky on Taiwan's response to China's challenge

ome 620 foreign journalists will watch 14 million voters cast their ballots for Taiwan's President today. Few of these foreign reporters would have been here, even though it is Taiwan's first direct (and hence democratic) presidential election, had it not been for a sinister presence just across the horizon. Not far away, the People's Republic of China exercises a detachment of the largest army in the world, occasionally hurling missiles into the Taiwan Strait, ordering soldiers to storm deserted beaches under screaming jet cover and dis-turbing the sleep of villagers along the Fukien coast as il explodes lonnes of live

Also not far off, but staying out of harm's way, cruise two US naval battle groups, part of what William Perry, Secretary of Defence, calls "the best damn navy in the world", exhibiting the greatest show of American force in the Western Pacific since the Vietnam War.

This is big news in a small place. What is emerging very fast here is a new democracy and a de facto nation, challenging those who define "Asian values" and shaking the Chinese Communist Party 10 its crumbling roots. China.

Any taxi driver will provide a seminar on the candidates, the issues and the Taiwan-China relationship. There is no slavish emperor-worship of Presideni Lee Teng-hui, leader of the late Chiang Kai-shek's Kuomintang nationalists (KMT) and today's certain winner. On the radio some callers refer to him as "an enemy of the people". For anyone who recalls Tiananmen in 1989, it was hard this week to comprehend at nothing in their mutual abuse: only sexual innuendo seems absent. One rival party has regularly accused Mr Lee of being an ex-Communist. Although the Communist Party has been illegal since 1945, this is regarded as mere election knockabout even by those who think it is true. This may be plucky little Taiwan, standing up to the giant across the Strait. But despite the election ballyhoo, the party balloons, banners and baseball caps, Taiwan is not the Athens of East Asia. Lifelong Kuomintang members shake their heads at the country's underlying corruption, its vote-buying, its domination of the media and its links to the "Black Societies", Taiwan's mafia, many members of which are KMT officials. Nor are the other parties free of this taint. When Taiwan's equivalent of the Mafia Don of Dons was shot dead recently, every political party sent a representative and a the helm during this crisis.

All week, during the proud reminders to foreigners that this is the first democratic election of a Chinese President for 5,000 years, the Tiananmen aura has hovered near. The People's Liberation Army is only just offstage. But Peking has been taken by surprise by an unusually decisive President Clinton and, since the arrival nearby of the aircraft carriers Independence and Nimitz, the prospect of the People's Liberadon Army seizing even a Taiwan-controlled atoll has all but vanished.

This election has resulted in an international setback for Peking. Liu Binyan, a 71-yearold exiled investigative reporter whom China accuses of being the senior "Black senior Hand behind the Tiananmen protests, is visiting Taiwan. Because of China's pressure, he says. Peking "has lost the hearts" of even those here who wanted reunification eventually. Moreover, they have made China an international outcast again. "as it was after Tiananmen".

Chinese officials have told their American counterparts frequently in recent weeks that for Peking, there are overriding issues. National unity is a traditional obsession of Chinese rulers. During the past 2.500 years the country has often been fragmented. Local riots have sparked provincial uprisings which, on occasion. have toppled dynasties. Minority peoples such as the Tibetan Buddhists and Sinkiang Muslims have struggled 10 wrench free.

hat is unusual about Taiwan is that all presidential candidates here, supported by most citizens, assert that the island is, in practice, independent "A rebellious province with an excellent army surrounded by a wide body of water," re-marks Su Shaozhi, another exiled ex-party veteran in Tai-pei for the elections. Unlike traditional rebel chieftains and the early 20thcentury contenders for power, who included Mao's Communists, no one here wants to take power in Peking. The Kuomintang maintains a fiction of legal authority over China. Mongolia and Tibet, but in 1991 it renounced the use of force to exercise that authority. That is Peking's nightmare: a prosperous Chinese province truly on its own. And with an elected Government. And during an interregnum in Peking, where the aged leader is dying and his lieutenants jockey for what remains of Communist power.

Oliver Walston argues that neither Government nor farmers could have averted the BSE crisis

Farewell to the roast indsight is an occupational disease of journalists which disease of journalists which in its mildest form is merely irritating. However, when mixed in equal quantities with ignorance, it can produce lethal results. The firestorm of BSE hysteria is an beef of old England example. As a result, I now find myself feeling profound sympathy for two groups about whom I have traditionally been less than enthusiastic: the present Government and of a Conservative Government. My fellow farmers, whom I have often criticised for undue dependence on subsidies, are even less to blame. The infected bone meal from sheep which appears to have caused the outbreak of BSE was, it should be remembered, put in the rations not by greedy or slipshod farmers but by compounders looking for cheap ingredients. It is also worth remembering that this practice was both perfectly legal and widespread throughout Europe. If the first priority of consumers is cheap food, it may not be entirely coincidental that the same objective is adopted all the way up the food chain.

The irony - and the worty - today is that it is now too late for any new step of publicising the fact and measures to be taken. The regula-altering its policy. For once, I find it tions restricting the use of infected difficult to disagree with the actions tissue and those governing the slaughter of infected animals have all been in operation for the past seven years. Thus, if any infected beef has been consumed, it was certainly consumed before 1988. Meanwhile. all we can do is to wait and wonder whether an epidemic will erupt. I find myself trying to remember how many Cornish pasties I ate in 1986. II is not a pleasant feeling. Then again, neither is it a pleasant feeling for a beef producer to realise that his 600kg steer, which was worth £750 last week, is worth £550 this week and could be worth much less next week. This fall in price has more than wiped out any profit he would have made. Cattle men are left feeling scared and helpless.

There is no immediate solution to this crisis. To slaughter the emire nacional herd would be impracticable. All dairy products and all meat would have to be imported - and there are simply not sufficient quantities available to meet this demand. The knock-on effect would be equally catastrophic as abattoirs, tanneries and producers manufacturing foods as varied as chocolate and jelly found their supplies drying up.

Of course there will be a few beneficiaries on the farms of Britain. Organic beef producers will enjoy increased sales, but this will remain a niche market restricted to those who can afford the very high premium which this produce fetches. Sheep producers have already seen a sharp increase in their prices: a fai lamb which sold for E55 last week fetched E70 this week. The pork and poultry trade will also help to fill the gap left by collapsing beef sales.

The tragedy facing both farmers and the Government is that the crisis has spiralled out of control. The let of confidence in beef is so profound that nu amount of reassuring ministerial pronouncements can possibly repair the damage. The lady in the supermarket queue may not be interested in the scientific minutiae of BSE, but she knows it is sensible to avoid beef. On the international scene, the position is similar even if the EU veterinary committee gives British beel its approval, France Germany and the other member states are unlikely to lift their bans.

Faced with the uncomfortable realisation that the media will continue to pour petrol on the flames, the Government will, I suppose, retreat into a series of public relations actions intended to reassure a frightened public. The most likely of these would be to slaughter every animal in any herd which has ever had BSE. This would, of course, have no effect on the disease itself but might show a dynamic and active Government Meanwhile, farmers in the uplands of Britain will be going bankrupt and nobody will care.

Time to make divorce humane

n Monday Members of Parliament will be voting on the best measure to emerge from the latter years of the Major administration. It is Lord Mackay of Clashfern's Family Law Bill. It proposes to make divorce in Britain more difficult.

Despite the claims of a mendacious and bizarre campaign against the Bill, it will do just that. Under the new law, the overwhelming majority of divorces would take longer than per cent of them twice as long. Unlike now, divorce would become impossible without a prior financial settlement. Unlike now, the present and probable future conduct of a parent will specifically determine access to children. Unlike now, nobody could have a quick divorce merely by supplying a partner with "grounds" such as adultery, violence or unreasonable behaviour. That is what I call harder divorce - but it is also more humane.

The campaign to retain Britain's present high-speed divorce system - average length seven months - is confused. It has been led with panache by the Editor of the Daily Moil, Paul Dacre, to the growing embarrassment of his staff, and has captured the moral intervendonist wing of the Conservative Party. The campaign is eager to retain at its core the concept of fault. Marriage is not just a bond of love or a pledge for eternity, say the campaigners, but a legal contract. If one party breaks it against the wishes of the other, he or she should suffer. Marital failure should imply guilt, not something as anodyne as irretrievable breakdown". As symbol of this guilt, divorce should be kept expensive, litigious and acrimonious. To hell with the happiness of those involved. I find this position immoral. Lord Mackay's Bill does not introduce "no fault" divorce. All it does is end the use, and abuse, of the concept of fault as a means to a quickied ivorce. Fault remains in British divorce law: in section 25 of the Matrimonial Causes Act on the division of property and in schedule 8 of the new Bill on custody of children. By denying divorce in the absence of a settlement, the Bill would increase, not diminish, the innocent party's leverage. At present that party's only redress is to force delay or expensively contest the divorce, a route chosen in only 7 per cent of cases. Full and linal semiement before divorce is a great advance on the present quickie system, whose "loose ends" poison future marriages and damage children.

he Family Law Bill has brought out an unattractive streak in the Conservative Party, that of punitive moral interventionism. Ralph Harris, in an article on this page a week ago, accused the Lord Chancellor of such grave errors as enjoying the support of progressives and of wanting divorce "on demand". The trumper on such a moral issue must never give forth an uncertain sound", said Lord Harris, though no sound is more uncertain than the present quickie divorce. This fierce opponent of state intervention in his right to smoke suddenly demands intervention in other people's domestic misery. "Is it not defeatist," he cries, "to conclude that law is powerless to do much about it?" I am sure Lenin would have said the same.

Laws that prescribe moral attitudes usually make asses of themselves. The present divorce law is inhumane. The advocates of "fault" argue that, by forcing the warring parties publicly to blame each other if they wish for a quick divorce, they are deterring divorce and protecting marriage. This has to be the most specious defence of the status quo in all of public policy. The bulk of the rise in divorce since 1969 has actually been in fault-based cases. The concept of fault does not deter divorce: 75 per cent of couples make use of this procedure despite the cost, misery and hurt to children. It is a bad argument that has made bad law.

If the opponents of the Mackay Bill want to stop divorce they should come clean and stop it. If they believe that people should be made to stick to their pledges, especially where children are involved, they should make them. But they are unwilling to go that far. So they defend a law that merely makes divorce messy, painful and expensive.

In the vehemence of this defence, these people have no concern for the impact of the present process, not only on the happiness of the parties themselves but on their children. Some peers even suggested that children should be able to prolong a divorce procedure, or be consulted on its terms. Of course children want marriages to stay together. Of course those who bring children into a loveless marriage stand condemned in the eyes of most humanitarians. But what most children want is certainty as to their future. They do not want delay.

This is affirmed by every responsible children's agency in opposing any delay longer than a year, by the Children's Society, the NSPCC. Barnardo's, the National Children's Home. They all point out that what children most dread at present is the feature of "fault" most beloved of speciacle of each parent having to berate the other in a public court for his or ber adultery or misbehaviour. To seek to corral children into being parties to this parental humiliation is callous beyond belief.

We would all like to see less divorce. Nobody has been able to show how delaying divorce beyond a year will promote marriage, as suggested in Lady Young's failed Lords amendment. There is no evidence that delay promotes reconciliation. For most couples, it merely prolongs uncertainty and postpones the rebuilding of their lives apart. If the objectors were serious about less divorce they might turn their attention to making couples think longer before entering unwise marriages. The way to curb divorce-on-demand is to curb marriage-on-demand. The Church of England, so careless of divorcees, might institute a one-year "cooling-off period" between banns and wedding day. Thousands of divorces might be prevented. The reason for Lord Mackay extending the present average period from seven months to a minimum of a year is to ensure that both the parties are sure in their decision and that they have reached a full and final settlement. If they cannot agree, there is still recourse from the mediator to the law. If the process to settlement takes two or even five years, so be it - a powerful incentive on the "guilty" party to settle. The inclusion of pension-splitting in a future Bill will make that settlement even more complex. But what matters is settlement, not the length of the delay. Family law is law, with an obligation to fairness and efficiency. It is not religious doctrine. It is not Lord Harris's moral trumpet or what Tessa Keswick calls in The Daily Telegraph "the pulsating heart of Conservative tradition". If that heart is about anything, it should be about humane legislation that respects personal freedom and responsibility from state interference. Tories should not try to nationalise the family.

ivorce law poses no threat to marriage. Marriage is hard enough without denying those who make mistakes the hope of redemption in a new life. Marital breakdown is no crime. Divorce is by definition about relationship between consenting adults that, for whatever reason, has not worked. Governments cannot make it work. The thesis that this Bill will "undermine marriage" - or some other Bill might uphold it implies a superiority of the State over personal emotions that, in its limiting case, is communist. I believe that this sort of Toryism, illiberal, punitive and authoritarian, makes the party deeply unattractive to many people.

I see it as a virtue in a law that it should seek reconciliation between parties, minimise cost and protect children. For the opposite - blame. delay, misery and expense - to be proclaimed as virtues in defence of moral trumpers is squalid. Divorce law is not a trumpet. It is the mechanism by which contracts can be dissolved in the interests of the parties involved, not the State. That is patently the aim of Lord Mackay's Bill. It should pass.

TORY spindoctors are already bracing themselves for one of their most frightful party conferences, to take place in the autumn of next year. The prospect of shoring up the party faithful after a heavy loss at the general election preys heavily

"I wonder what that means?"

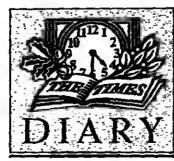

They should prepare themselves for worse still. Alan Clark, the preening diarist, is to present a four-part documentary series on the party for the BBC during the course of the conference. It is unlikely to be overly sympathetic.

"It's a completely objective look al what the party did in the 20th century, going from the setting up of the 1922 Committee until the 1997 [sic] election," he says. "Conservatives are not actually particularly bothered by their history. That is one of their problems - they are only concerned with the day-to-day problems of party management."

Clark insists that the programme, which will be accompanied by a book, will be a serious analysis. "No. it will not be salatious," he says. "It's a ridicu-lous adjective to use."

POOR JOHN BULL

It will never be glad, confident carving again

Beef has, until now, enjoyed a privileged place on the Englishman's table. But the terrible prospect of cattle herds facing slaughter and the profoundly unsettling possibility of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease incubating, unknown, in thousands across the country has put an end to that. The meat intertwined with the island story has now become another national institution in which the nation has no confidence.

From the 18th-century beef has been more than a staple foodstuff: it has been central to Britain's self-definition. The Roast Beef of Old England was no bogus Merrie England marketing invention like the egregious ploughman's lunch, but an authentic coinage of Henry Fielding's which sprang from the ubiquity and symbolic importance of the meat for the Georgians. Beef became a potent metaphor in literature, cartoons and political discourse for the virtues of the newly-unified British state. A nation of beefeaters was sturdy, handy with a knife or sword, prosperous and free.

The ascendancy of beef in the 18thcentury sprang from the economic success and agricultural improvements which placed Britain on the trajectory to pre-eminence. In the late Middle Ages and Tudor times what prosperity there was had been built on wood and wool. With Protestantism, and capitalism. Britain grew wealthier than its ancien regime adversaries across the Channel. Where the continentals relied on oxen as draught animals and swine for their meat. the British could afford to eat the more expensively cultivated flesh of the cow. The temperate climate which encouraged political moderation also favoured good grazing. The one part of the British Isles where beef-eating did not take root was impoverished Ireland, where the few cattle were working animals and it was held that "the common sort" would never kill a cow. The British taste for beef soon became integral to foreign perceptions. In 1748 the Swedish visitor Pehr Kalm remarked that "The art of cooking as practised by most Englishmen does not extend beyond roast beef and plum pudding". More importantly, perhaps, beef became the symbol of the advantages Britons enjoyed which were denied the lesser breeds across the water. Gillray and Hogarth, two of the artists most vividly engaged with the Georgian social scene, deployed beef as a metaphor for liberty. In 1792 Gillray contrasted the citizens of Revolutionary France reduced to eating scallions and in fear of their freedom with the prosperous and independent Briton plump and free to enjoy best beef.

The importance of beef to the British character was also reflected in the efforts made by rival ideologies to appropriate its imagery. Whoever stood for beef stood for Britain. The Tories and the country faction in Georgian politics portrayed themselves as pure-bred yeomen with plain beef on their oak tables in contrast to Whig grandees such as Walpole and Newcastle whose court elite preferred highly sauced, and highly suspect. foreign delicacies. And, while other nations might equate prosperity with a chicken in the pot, redistributive radicals in Britain, from Cobbett to G.K. Chesterton sought to spread wealth by seeing men secure an acre. and a cow. Even the martial skills which underpinned imperial expansion were attributed to beef: 18th-century sailors ate 208lb of it per annum, six times the per capita consumption last year, and the army relied on bully beef as much as the Gatling gun when it bore the white man's burden.

After this week any thought of preserving beef as symbol of virility and liberty looks, at best, forlorn. Other nations have had their metaphorical mascots in nature threatened. America has seen the bison leave the prairies, giant redwoods felled and the bald eagle face extinction. The Russians have seen the sturgeon, whose eggs proclaimed imperial greatness as assuredly as M Fabergé's, succumb to pollution. The French saw the vines which furnished their finest product blighted forever by phylloxera, and the Irish search for self-sufficiency has always been more urgently sought and more poignantly elusive since the Potato Famine. But none of these nations has suffered such a blow, so precipitately, to its esteem as Britain this week. Tomorrow's Sunday hunch will be a melancholy mealtime as Britons recognise it will never be glad, confident, carving again.

Steps to reinforce child protection

From the Choir of Actinn on Child Exploitation

Sir, Alan Franks ("Taking liberties", Magazine, March 161 is right to point out that although we have a national register of children at risk of sexual abuse, there is no comparable register of child sex offenders. There is now considerable weight of opinion amongst those bodies charged with protecting children, as well as among the general public, in favour of the creation of such a register.

The view of Action on Child Explois ation is that puedophilia is a sexual preference that will stay for life, that changing the behaviour of child sexual offenders is very difficult, and that the success rate is very low. We therefore believe that, in the interests of protecting children, there should be adequate methods of controlling paedophiles and every anempt should be made to find an effective way of changing their behaviour.

The problem is exacerbated by the very low conviction rate of offenders. Even those sentenced by the court are free to disappear into the community on completing their time in prison or on licence or when their probation orders are terminated. Generally they have to engender suspicion or commit another offence before police records

We believe that the arguments for a register outweigh the intrusions into civil liberties which its establishment would mean. Moreover we believe that it should be held by the police and, with normal safeguards, be available to statutory child-protection agencies. A requirement on the offender, punishable as an offence if disregarded, should be to keep the register informed of changes in address or employment.

We also believe that the register should be kept in such a way as to ensure that the child-protection agencies are warned when paedophiles move into their area, particularly when they move into households where there are children or into jobs with power over or contact with children.

The erosion of its to becoming extinct" (News in brief, natural membership base applies to March 21), rather overstates the case, all established churches. Yet the need At the present rate of loss I calculate it will be 41 years before the official membership of the Methodist Church for an active and creative spiritual dimension in daily life and a meaningful relationship with Jesus Christ is all is reduced to zero. In terms of the wid-er community role which you cite it would be 74 years. Conservationists

Few people are equipped to cope alone with the daily crossfire of modern life, where potential relationships, within and outside marriage, are increasingly undermined. This is where leadership within the broad body of the Church is needed. A stronger church with a more informal institutional structure can provide the service that people require. It is then up to church leaders as well as the lay members to reconsider how to get their message across.

i appeal to the leaders of both the Methodist and Anglican churches to reopen the talks that Archbishop Ramsey originated several decades ago. The infusion of new blood and enthusiasm after a unification would lead the way for renewal and growth within the Church.

musical soundbite

From the Chairman of the Richard Strauss Society

Sir, You report today that the conductor, Claudio Abbado, is suing his record company. Deutsche Grammophon, on the ground (among others) that they have damaged the artistic integrity of Gustav Mahler's music by compiling a compact disc consisting of slow movements from four of his symphonies.

There are historical precedents where a composer was happy to produce what might be called a "soundbite" of his own work. Richard Strauss produced two waltz sequences from his opera Der Rosenkavalier and a symphonic fantasy from his opera Die Frou Ohne Schotten, Ravel's orchestration of Mussorgsky's piano work, Pictures at an Exhibition, could hardly be said to damage Mussorg-sky's artistic integrity.

The real reason behind the move to compilations is simply one of economics. I suspect few composers of the past, had they had the opportunity of enjoying extra revenue from their works, would have felt their integrity under threat.

The serious music lover does not have to buy these compilations, but must realise that their high sales enable record companies to invest in really first-class new recordings, such as Decca's reported £1 million on Solo conducting Die Frou Ohne Schatten

Yours faithfully, RICHARD GOLDMSITH, Richard Strauss Society, Whitecroft, Poole Street, Cavendish, Sudbury, Suffolk. March 20.

From Mr Robert Layton

Sir, Richard Morrison (Who killed the great dictators?", Arts, March 20) may or may not be right in his sur-mise that there are no charismatic conductors nowadays, though the same might be said of critics. I can't imagine scholar-critics like Emest Newman or Eric Blom, writing in the 1950s, or writers like Compton Mackenzie, having any more truck with the cannibalisation of Mahler symphonies than has Abbado.

Mr Morrison errs in imagining that record executives are trying to widen the public for good music. Their interest is not so commercially pure, but rather purely commercial, and if shredding the Mona Lisa and selling bits of it would make them money they would do it.

Yours faithfully, 112 Goldhurst Terrace, NW6. March 21.

From Mr Max Prola

Sir, Richard Morrison relates that conductors now rank rather low in the hierarchy of today's opera house, a venue in which "musical values are mocked by wacky stage concepts, and conductors don't seem to object".

He forgets that one conductor has stepped forward to stem the tide of insane opera productions. Our own Sir Edward Downes courageously refused to be associated with a horrendous Nabucco that he was to have conducted in the Royal Opera's Verdi Festival this summer (report, December 23, 1995). Let us hope that others, conductors and singers alike, will emulate

Bar on the Internet

From Mr Neil Addison Sir, Barrister Peter Gray (report,

March 20) will not find the Bar rules helpful to him when advertising his services on the Internet. If clients want to use his services they will have to go through a solicitor, which means e-mailing the solicitor, who then e-mails Mr Gray, who will have to e-mail his reply to the solicitor to e-mail back to the client: a procedure which does rather put the Bar in the slow lane of the information superhighway.

Things are not so bad, however, for foreign clients, who can contact Mr Gray directly. He can be directly e-mailed from Calais but not from

Thomas Enders. US diplomat and banker, died of melanoma in New York on March 17 aged 64. He was born in Hartford. Connecticut, oo November 28. 1931.

THOUGH brusque in character. Tom Enders succeeded in pursuing an adron career as a diplomat, much of it accentuated by Cold War intrigues in tropical climes. He played an imporiant role in the secret bombing of Cambodia during the Nixon Adminis-Iration and later, as Assistant Secrelary of State fur Economic and Business Affairs, he found himself dealing with the aftermath of the first Opec oil crisis. In the most controversial period of his diplomatic career he was Assistant Secretary for Inter-American Affairs, guiding the Reagan Administration's policy in Central America. He also served as Ambassadur to Canada and Spain.

Enders, as one of his colleagues once out it. "had the exterior of a very cold, difficult kind of person. But what was behind it was a very impressive intelligence and strength of character. He remained aloofly self-composed even when embroiled in the must complex political situations.

After retiring from the American Foreign Service. Enders embarked upon a second career in the world of finance. As a managing director of Salomon Brothers he became head of its New Yurk international corporate finance group. He built on his extensive experience in Latin America. d recognising early on the growth potenrial of emerging markets in the aftermath of the 1983 debt crisis. Al Salomon Brothers he played a major role in the return of borrowers in Argenona, Brazil. Chile and Mexico to the international financial markets, and created financial structures for this purpose. His efforts led to Saloman Brothers represending enrities in the region in numerous strategic assignments. These included advising the Mexican Government in the restructuring of the financial sector: the first SEC-registered equity issue by a Chilean company in recent history; participation in privatisations of the telecommunications sector: and representing Laon American interests in their US

Yale. He graduated in 1953 summa cum laude, first of his class, and went un to obtain a Masters in History at the University of Paris (1955) and in Economics at Harvard (1957).

Enders entered the Foreign Service of the United States in 1958, Within a decade he had become deputy assistant secretary for international monetary affairs. In 1970 he won the Arthur S. Fleming Award as one of the ten outstanding young individuals in the federal Government.

In 1971 the Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger, selected Enders for assignment in Cambodia where he served as chief of mission for three war-torn years. Here Enders played a vital role in American efforts to bolster the Saigon Government during the withdrawal of American troops from South Vietnam. He was placed in charge of a committee that reviewed requests by the Government of Prime Minister Lon No! for dandestine American bombing raids over Cambodian Ierri-tories occupied by North Vietnamese forces. His was something of a precarious position. Not only was he the target of three assassination attempts - on one occasion the car he had been riding in was enurely destroyed - but he also aroused the anger of certain congressmen. He was accused of misleading two representatives of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee who had visited Phnom Penh to investigate whether American air strikes were sometimes overstep-

Kissinger, however, promoted Enders and in 1974 he returned to the Stale Department as Assistant Secretary for Economic and Business Affairs. He supervised American participation in the Group of Seven response to the aftermath of the first Opec oil crisis. the common production of the second
From 1979 to 1981 Enders was Ambassador to the European Community in Brussels, where he worked on reducing trade barriers as well as other economic policy issues.

At the beliest of the Secretary of State, Alexander Haig, Enders became Assistant Secretary of State of Inter-American Affairs at a time of strong and conflicting emotions concerning US foreign policy. Enders sought to be a balancing force while addressing a progressive agenda, but he was seen as something of a hurdliner when he defended the El Salvadorean Government during a wave of death-squad killings and army massacres. However, he believed that the resolution of economic problems would bring political stability in its wake, and he worked In prumote economic reforms and export development programmes.

Somewhat disproving his earlier critics, he also pressed for negotiations with left-wing groups in both El Salavador and Nicaragua. His support of free elections and the development of democraric institutions led to elections in El Salvador in 1982. In Nicaragua he supported a two-track policy of maintaining military pressure on the Sandinista Government through the Contras while initiating negotiations between the two sides.

From 1983 to 1986, Enders was Ambassador to Spain. He worked on building popular and governmental support to keep Spain in Nato, and also led successful negotiations for the maintenance of American military bases at reduced strength. During this period he wrote a book, Latin America: The Crisis of Debt and Growth, In 1986 he retired from the Foreign Service and joined Salomon Brothers

A man of imposing stature, Enders enjoyed mountaineering. He climbed extensively in the Canadian Rockies and the Alps, and walked throughout France and Spain, locating the old Roman and pilgrimage trails. He also collected rare books on travel and exploration, and early maps chronicling the discovery of the Americas. He is survived by his Italian wife Gaetana, whom he married in 1951, and by three daughters and a son.

LORD AIREDALE

Oliver James Vandeleur Kitson, 4th Baron Airedale and a Deputy Speaker of the House of Lords, died on March 19 aged 80. He was born on April 22, 1915.

LORD AIREDALE served as a Deputy Speaker of the House of Lords for more than thirty years, breaking previous records of service in that office. He was a Liberal peer and a familiar figure in the chamber, noted for his lack of sartorial elegance clothes, too, certainly breaking records ul long service. He loved the Lords, anending the sessions with commendable regularity and treating the House as his home-fromhome. By way of contrast he also claimed the record for the shortest speech in the history of the House when, in July 1965, he rose simply to announce that he had nothing to

The Airedales were a Yorkshire family with a propensity for breeding females. Their progenitor was James Kitson, Mayor of Leeds, 1860-62, whose son became the 1st Baron in 1907, having served as MP for Coine Valley, Yorkshire, from 1892 to 1907. He died in Paris in 1911, leaving a million pounds. The 2nd Baron produced seven daughters and was succeeded in the ritle by his half-brother, a director of the Ford motor company and the Bank of England. His son was Oliver, the 4th Baron. Oliver Kitson's mother was from the Irish family of Vandeleurs, in Co Clare, and he added their name to his own as an additional Christian name. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, and became a barrister at the Inner Temple in 1941. He served during the war as a major in The Green Howards. In 1958 he succeeded his father as 4th Baron and three years later he was selected as a Deputy Chairman of Committees in the House of Lords and the following year as a Deputy Speaker. Airedale was a public-spirited man, who engaged in numerous public issues, many on behalf of the private individual and consumer. In 1959 in a letter to The Times he urged banks to keep their doors open longer in order to disperse the queues that formed in the lunch hour. This was only achieved many years later. In 1965 he advocated that health warnings be placed on cigarette packets rather than posters "as it reaches the people who need most to be warned at no cost to the taxpayer", In 1967 there was a prolonged drama at his country seat when planners observed that he had built a gate in the wall of his rambling mansion, Ufford Hall, near Stamford. He did so because the wall fell down and he was aware of the potential hazards since his cousin's child had been killed by falling masonry. The council Objected to his gate, but he was allowed to keep it on condition that it was fixed closed and could therefore be deemed a wall. Airedale commented: "A lot of damned nonsunse."

Later he engaged in a long feud with the rural council over what it claimed was the non-payment of fol legal expenses. He stood his ground and, being well versed in the law, he won the day, despite numerous visits from the local constabulary.

Among the other issues

Airedale tackled was an attack on commercial radio, which he believed produced more bad music than good, and programmes "dealing with horror and sensationalism". He also involved himself in the decimal currency debate; succeeded in changing the name of the Consumer Protecdon Bill to the Trade Descriptions Act: and rightened the legislation concerning misleading advertising by suppliers. A keen animal and hird lover, he look special pride in winning a banle to prevent police from searching the premises of suspected egg thieves without a warrant from a magistrate. For recreation he enjoyed making elderberry champagne which he served to his guests in Lincolnshire.

On account of the number of females in the Kitson family and the corresponding lack of males, there is no heir to the barony. Lord Airedale re-mained a lifelong bachelor.

HER HIGHNESS LADY VICTORIA OPOKU-WARE II

Her Highness Lady Victoria Opoko-Ware II, First Lady of Ashanti, died of cancer on March 6 aged 66. She was born in Kumasi, Ghaoa, on April 22, 1929.

IN ASHANTI history, no fe-Cunningham's great suc-cess as a human physiologist male consort of the king has ever played so prominent a role as Victoria Opoku-Ware. Diplomatic, but demanding in experimental design and incharacter, she was described as one of the most powerful people in the kingdom. new apparatus. The treadmill Ashanti

The ancient kingdom of Ashanri is now an administrative region of the modern republic of Ghana. But although its ruler, the Asantahene, wields no executive power he continues to maintain a court and oversee his people's strongly traditional tribal structures. The king customarily contracts a number of dynastic marriages. However, Victoria Opoku-Ware remained, uniquely, her husband's sole consort. She played a pivotal role through-out the difficult years of modernising the monarchy in a country dominated by the tension between the traditional Ashano polity and the modern state, and in doing so she shaped a new and stronger role for the first lady of perhaps his due (although he Ashann. Victoria Nana Akua Afiiriyie Bando was groomed for her position from an early age. Born in the Ashanti capital Kumasi, into one of the most prominent families in the kingdom, she was betrothed at the age of just 13 to Matthew Poku, a nephew of the King. Sir Osei Agyeman-Prempeh II, who had ruled the kingdom of Ashano for forty years. Io 1945, a short while after she

> Cape Coast, she was married with full royal honours. In Ashanti culture the monarchy is not handed down by primogeniture. It is said that it was to a great extent because of the advocacy of Lady Vic-toria that in 1970 her husband had completed her education

at Wesley Girls High School,

- the came to the throne Ashanti golden stool. From then on she played a powerful part. In the matriarchal Ashanri culture, she was in the vanguard in harnessing and propagating the strengths of Ashanri women and in championing equal rights.

Perhaps her most important role, however, was that of intercessor. Heads of state sought her guidance, advice and support before making overtures to the King. She was also an important ambassador for her people, accompa-nying the King on overseas visits — including one to Britain in 1971 when they were received at Buckingham Palace - and entertaining in Kumasi foreign statesmen in-cluding President Nixon and President Bush.

Lady Victoria was a convinced Christian. II was under her auspices that Robert Runcie, then Archbishop of Canterbury, first met Pope John Paul II. This was to lead to the Pope's historic visit to Canterbury in 1982.

In 1995, despite her failing health, she carried on her duties with aplomb and a dedication to duty which culminated in the silver jubilee of her husband the King. In a kaleidoscopic celebration, hundreds of chieftains swathed in tradicional kenti robes and weighed down by golden jewellery came with horn-blowing entourages to pay their respects to one of the ongest-serving monarchs on the African continent.

She is survived by her husband. King Opoku-Ware II, and by her son Akempimhene of Kumasi, who within the court is head of the King's Cabinet. She is also survived by her two daughters.

BOUND TO COME BACK

By Leonard Bockley

Eurovision Song Contest Knock, knock. Who was there? I was. And if you are half the patriot you should be, you were there too, watching and rooting for Britain. The Greeks had their festival of Dionysus. The druids had Stonehenge. We have the Eurovision Song Contest and Saturday's audience in 25 countries, was estimated at 300,000,000 and me. L of course, had been glued to the television set since the early evening, ready with my ball-point poised over the score chart in the Radio Times. [ After all the songs, the 12 juries will consider their verdicts. Each country has ten marks. Enter the votes in the vertical columns - then add them up to find the winner. In the far left column award your marks - and choose your own winner.") If it transpired that I had picked up the wrong copy and was marking a plan of last year's Boat Race, well, these things can happen when you are excited.

Mary Hopkin kept her head for Britain. She looked fetching in a gown of sparkling black, and when her thin little song invited us to take off our coats and come inside I thought we were home and dry. In the event, however, she came second, well beaten by Dana (Rosemar Brown) for Ireland who sang a song entitled:

Something so bad is bound to come back," reflected Leonard Buckley gloomily as he watched the Eurovision Song Contest.

"All Kinds of Everything", which I personally thought no sort of nothing. But all 12 entries were undistinguished. I doubt if a more indifferent group of songs has ever been heard at one and the same time since the junior composers' competition at the Paignton Musical Festival in 1923.

The camera, however, got above itself this year. We were taken on a tour of Amsterdam before we swept into the concert hall, and we also saw the contestants in their habitats. I liked the glimpse we had of the Frenchman chasing a girl round a tree near the Eiffel Tower. Colour, too, added its surprises. The young man from Spain wore a sky blue suit, while his backing group were in shocking pink. The voting, drawn in from the capitals of Eurpoe, went off with fewer hitches than usual, though I felt that the B.B.C. might have let Bob McKenzie or one of its other psephologists give us some quick comments on the swing. One thing puzzled me. The stage motif was all spheres and scimitars. Though this was Holland I was reminded somehow of the Japanese Samurai. Perhaps that was why I kept thinking of hara kiri.

There are doubts about the future of this contest. But something so bad is bound to come back. Indeed, with the Iron Curtain countries now watching we could even have an entry from Russia. Which brings a warning. Mary Hopkin for all her sweetness seemed at only three-quarter power. For this affair you need a song with a beat and you need to belt it out. So if one of those young ladies from the steppes does ever come forward to thud out a ditty whom could we possibly put up to oppose her? I can only think of Mr. Clive Jenkins.

Subsidence blights housing recovery

BY SARA MCCONNELL

RENEWED fears of subsidence are blighting growing numbers of houses fur sale as cautious valuers insist on additional engineers' reports for any visible cracks.

In most cases, cracks are not due to subsidence, but prospective buyers are refusing to spend hundreds of pounds on extra reports and are going elsewhere. Lenders will not advance mortgages unless satisfied with a valuation.

This is a blow for the housing market, just as it is starting to show signs of recovery after five years in the doldrums.

Insurers were forced to pay £326 million in subsidence claims in 1995, more than double the amount in the previous year. Norwich Union paid £18 million worth of claims for subsidence lası summer. Commercial Union set aside an extra £26 million, and Legal & General paid out £23 million. They say that another hot summer will bring more subsidence misery for thousands of homeowners, London, the South East, the Midlands and Manchester are the worst affected.

Brian Bundy, branch manager at CE Heath, said valuers were being much more cautious. They see a crack and see possible subsidence. Ten years ago, they wouldn't have worried.

Valuers are anxious to cover their backs to avoid being sued by lenders or borrowers. A number of them are still fighting legal battles with lenders who allege they overvalued property as the market went into freefall in the early 1990s.

Geoff Holden, of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors, said: "If valuers see a crack they don't like, they would tell a buyer to take further advice from a structural engineer. When confronted with a crack, buyers will often pull out. The cost implications put a lot of people off."

BCCI liquidators fight threat to fee

BY PATRICIA TEHAN, BANKING CORRESPONDENT

THE liquidators of the collapsed Bank of Credit and Commerce International may lose 40 per cent of their £10 million Luxembourg fees, and future fees worldwide are threatened, after a panel of "experts" in Luxembourg told a court that their charges were too high. In court yesterday, Deloitte & Touche, the liquidator, defended their fees, and, in a letter to the experts, the firm has described an expert report as fundamentally misconceived, superficial and inadequate". BCCI collapsed in 1991 with estimated liabilioes of $14 billion and still has a black hole of $10 billion. The liquidators were particularly stung by the experts' attempts to force Brian Smouha, the Deloitte & Touche senior partner who coordinated the worldwide liquidation of the bank, to take lower fees than the experts have agreed for themselves. In theory, the expert opinion is applied only to £2.5 million lees for work done in relation to Luxembourg-based BCCI SA by Deloitte & Touche in the six months after BCCI's collapse. This means a reduction of Il million. However, the liquidators fear that if the Luxembourg court accepts the expert opinion, it could seek a

quent fees of up to £10 million. The total Deloitte & Touche fees so far are $300 million. Although most of this has been approved by UK and Cayman Island courts and creditors' committees, the liquidators fear that future fees could be affected. Fees are running at tens of millions of dollars a year. In the UK, where the bulk of liquidadon fees are incurred, fees were $14 million last year. Tony Houghton, a partner. in Deloitte & Touche said: "We have taken this very seriously. They have suggested that we have over-charged, that the rates we have applied are not related to the work we have under taken. This is professionally damaging." The experts were appoir by the Luxembourg court in 1993 in a standard procedure there to review the activities of liquidators in the provisional liquidation after the collapse of BCCI in July 1991 until January 1992. Even though the Luxembourg court had ap-proved the Deloitte & Touche fees, the experts commented on the fees applied for by the liquidators.

The panel of experts is made up of Bernard Harder, a French accountant, a sole practitioner, Dr Christian Derpa, a German lawyer in a two-partner practice, and Jean Reuter, a Luxembourg accountant from a small firm.

They recommended that the liqudiators' fees be at the rate for a European audit. Mr Houghton said that they calculated a mixed bag of rates, looking at what they said were average rates for European they called "an average rate". Mr Houghton said that Dea translation of the draft report from the experts early last year. In its response, it sought expert opinion from other firms that have done big insolvency investigations. KPMG and Coopers & Lybrand gave evidence in support of Deloine & Touche, saying that insolvency rates are gher than audit to reflect the different nature of the assignment and the role of profession-firms, and came up with what als in managing the future of a company in crisis. Both said that the Deloitte & Touche fees were less than they would have charged. In a letter to the experts in January, John Connolly, Deloide & Touche managing partner, said: The experts did not even consider relevant insolvency rates nor indeed dent experts." He said of the panel: "The expertise is of no value and should be ignored."

Success for $2.6bn Disney global bond

BY OUR BANKING CORRESPONDENT

WALT DISNEY'S $26 billion global bond issue was snapped up by investurs yesterday. CS First Boston and Merrill

Lyuch, joint lead managers of the deal, had initially offered a $2 billion two-tranche global issue in five and ten-year tranches. However, strong demand for the prestigious Disney name prompted managers to raise the size of the offering. Oversubscription for the global offering enabled managers to achieve a bener price for the deal than many traders expected. It had been long-awaited as part of a package to finance the acquisition of Capital Cides in the US for $19 billion announced last August. There is still speculation that Disney may have to raise further debt to finance the $10 billion cash element of the acquisition.

The first tranche is for $1.3 billion, maturing March 27, 2001. It is to be priced at 35 basis points over Treasuries. The second tranche is also for $1.3 billion, maturing March 27, 2006. It is to be priced at 47 basis points over Treasuries, Traders had initially expected a $1.5 billion global offering with a spread of between 38-40 basis points over Treasuries for the first tranche and 50 basis points for the second. According to reports last night, the five-year tranche had been most popular among European investors, while the ten-year tranche had appealed to US institutions.

Yesterday's deal is the first global bond issued by Disney. If it had not been split into two the largest corporate global bond ever. Further issues from Disney are expected. Analysts in New York last night said that following the acquisition Disney may still have to sell some assets to pay down debt. The firm was nearly debt-free before the acquisition, but now carries $16 billion in goodwill and possibly as much as $21 billion in debt, according to one analyst.

Glaxo Wellcome report shows £2.15m for Sykes

By ERIC REGULY

STR RICHARD SYKES, chief executive of Glaxo Wellcome, received £2.15 million in salary and other payments in the 18 months to the end of December, the annual report, published yesterday, revealed. The figures span an 18-month period because the group changed its year-end after Glaxo's £9.t billion purchase in 1995 of Wellcome. Of Sir Richard's total, £1.12 million was salary and £770,000 a one-off payment to terminate an old incentive scheme. He also received a and £41,000 of benefits. In the 12 months to the end of June 1994, total remuneration was £931,000. His base salary in the current year is £800,000 and he bas 433,000 share options, whose average exercise price is 650p. The shares closed down 2p, at 817p.

utive director was Jeremy Strachan, responsible for legal and corporate affairs. In the 18month period, total remuneration was £1.06 million, of which £5t4,000 was salary and £414,000 payment to terminate the old incentive scheme.

Bonuses lift NatWest directors' pay

BY OUR BANKING CORRESPONDENT

NATWEST directors had their salaries frozen last year. but most enjoyed substantial increases to their total pay as a result of performance-related bonuses.

John Tugwell, the chairman and chief executive of Bancorp. NatWest's US subsidiary, saw his total pay fall from £1.46 million to £1.12 million, but the 1994 figure included payments made under a long-term incentive plan. He was the exception to the pay freeze, his salary increased by 3.6 per cent to leave the NatWest board later this year when he moves with Bancorp lo its new owner, Fleet Financial.

£551,000. Mr Tugwell will

Derek Wanless, NatWest's chief executive, was paid a salary of E350,000, but a performance-related bonus of £200,000 and other benefits. gave him a total pay rise of 19 per cent to £594,000.

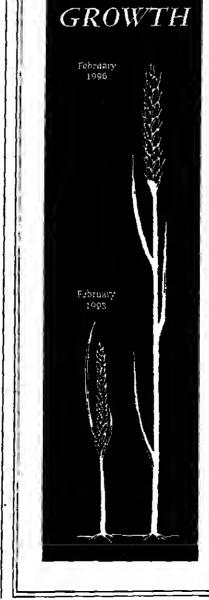

The best-paid UK-based director was Martin Owen. chief executive of NatWest Markets. He enjoyed a 26 per cent total pay rise to £617,000 including a £277,000 bonus. Lord Alexander, the chairman, was paid 8.8 per cent more at £454,000. His bonus was £135,000, up on the previous year's £100,000. John Melbourn, deputy chief executive, was paid 15.8 per cent more at £476,000. Martin Gray, chief executive of NatWest UK, suffered to £310,000. Douglas Hurd, former Forign Secretary, received £62,000 for his first two-and-ahalf months as deputy chairman of NaiWest Markets. The benefits of non-executive

Fund managers set to back the rat-catcher

uriouser and curiouser. After the Granada/Forte epic, the City has come up with a sort of corporate sideshow. Last month Rentokil, whose roots are steeped in rat poison, launched a near £2 billion takeover bid for BET, the service conglomerate whose operations range from the hire of towels to the hire of cranes. I am not. I confess, particularly familiar with either of these companies but, merely by observing developments, one's learning curve inevitably improves. Originally, we are invited to believe, Rentokil favoured an agreed deal. Clive Thompson, chief executive of Rentokil, made contact with Sir Christopher Harding, chairman of BET. In the event, John Clark, BET's chief executive, was in Houston and, during the run up to official disclosure of the approach, startling percipience (for want of a stronger phrase) served to rerate BET's shares by some 15 per cent.

The Stock Exchange, true to form, leuridied air aivestigation

the usual suspects. The Takeover Panel, with an admittedly less complex remit, also held an inquiry and, in the space of a week, publicly rebuked Lazards, advisers to Rentokil. According to the Panel, Lazards had failed to keep it fully informed of Rentokil's intentions and should have acted more quickly to prevent a faise market in

No sooner did Rentokil reveal its wish to parley then it abandoned this tactic in favour of a hostile bid based on a cash and share package which, taking Rentokil at 359p, currently values BET at 200.2p. This is accompanied by an all-cash alternative of 179.5p.

BET promptly described the terms as "wholly inadequate" and speculation had it that the company was considering basing its defence on a major restructuring operation. including disposals worth some E300 million. Such speculation, unlike the bid speculation, proved wrong. This would appear fortumate because it is highly debatable whether BET's parts are worth more than the price Rentokil has offered for the whole. From the outset, neither Thompson nor Clark agreed on anything. including the potential overlap between the two companies. Thompson proclaimed the overlap was in the region of 70 per cent; Clark argued it was nearer 25 per cent. Insults were exchanged. Rentokil charged BET's management with having "demonstrably failed to enhance shareholder value". BET retorted that Rentokil's offer revealed "a muddled plan to create an unfocused conglomerate".

It was at this point, a matter of days after Rentokil opted for a hostile approach, that it proposed to BET that it should purchase just 75 per cent of the company in return for a recommendation. Feelers were put out by Nicholas Jones of Lazards who suggested to Barings, advisers to BET, that discussions should focus on Rentokil's acquisition of BET's textile services, distribution and electronic security operations. LET promptly rejected the proposal on the grounds that the businesses Rentokil wanted to acquire were central to the company's strategy. As BET put it: "This would have left shareholders without an offer and the company with only a quarter of its operations." Under the proposal, BET would have retained its plant hire, resort management and conference operations, which account for about 25 cent of sales. Any deal would probably have sett BET WIR 2 significant capital gains tax liabil-

Thompson's reaction was that he was "disappointed" that BET had rejected the opportunity to enter into discussions, a move "surely against the best interests of BET shareholders. Thompson, brimming with munificence, added that Rentokil had been prepared to examine a number of possibilities to avoid leaving BET with a large tax liability. Such possibilities included the acquisioon of the whole company and a subsequent spin-off of the parts Rentokil did not want.

This approach, to all intents and purposes, was perceived as strictly for the birds: the birds being those institutional sbareholders who were not entirely happy about Remokil's extravaganza. Rentokil. it may be recalled, is the company that has achieved 20 per cent growth per annum for the best part of a decade and a half. The secrets of Rentokil's success, under Thompson, have been a host of bolion acquisitions, organic growth and the creation of a well-trained and well-equipped blue collar workforce BET, in contrast, faced bankrupicy during the early Nineties, the legacy of wild takeover flings during the Eighnes. Clark. an ex-US Marine, was called in to rationalise operations, a task that culminated in last Thursday's forecast that pre-tax profits will rise 28 per cent this year to £142 million. As Clark delicately put it: "We came in to fix this mother and now it's really growing." It is no secret that several institutions, sensitive to the controversy that surrounded their support for the creation of a Granada/Forte conglomerate, would have liked to have seen an agreed deal. As one fund manager informed the Financial Times, fees - expected to total more than £100 million - will soon equate to "the market capitalisation of a decent sized company." Equally eyecatching were the headlines to the effect that Clark will receive more than £5 million if Rentokil's bid succeeds. This embraces some £3 million from a medium-term incentive scheme, the targets of which have been triggered by the offer price. Clark is expected to garner a profit of more than [] million on share options and he also enjoys a three-year rolling contract, his annual salary being E480.000. Lord Tebbit, a nonexecutive director of BET and chairman of the company's remuneration commioee, responded: There was not a long queue of suitable applicants for the post when we recruted him in 1991,"

The potential rewards for Clark (who is, after all, opposing the bid) are reputed to have "provoked outrage" among certain anony-mous institutions. Strange, therefore, that such institutions did not oppose the plan when it was introduced in the autumn of 1993. One sure way of preventing Clark from reaping his rewards would be to reject Rentokil's bid, even if the terms are modestly increased. I jest. The reality is that fund managers are almost certainly going to accept, as they almost always do. That is why BET's shares, at 204p, are

C E Heath to split and float its computer services arm

BY MARIANNE CURPHEY

CE HEATH, the insurance broker whose shares have fallen almost £3 in two years. has confirmed plans to split its broking and computer services divisions and float the laner under the name of Rebus on April 17.

Peter Presland, Heath's outgoing chief executive will head the computer division and his salary will be reduced from £195,000 to £150,000. However, he will walk away with a package of £300,000 to compensate him for the severance of his three-year rolling contract with Heath. He will also remain on the board of Heath as a non-executive director on a salary of £15,000 a year.

His compensation package is bound to anger some small shareholders who 18 months ago reacted furiously to a loyalty bonus package worth a total of £1.0 million paid to John Mackenzie Green (then managing director and now Heath chief executive) and Mr Presland. The bonus came at a time when Heath had made a small pre-tax profit of £3.84 million and a post-rax loss for the 1993-94 financial year of

£8.4 million. Shareholders will be offered one Rebus share for every Heath share they hold. Heath is subscribing for £4.5 million worth of new shares in Rebus. which it will keep for at least

Paul Hughes, group finance director, said the exact num-ber of shares depended on the opening price at flotation, but Heath would hold a maximum 9.5 per cent of Rebus

Mr Hughes said the company's market capitalisation was between £50 million and £55 million. With 68 million shares in issue, this would put the value of Rebus shares at between 74p and 80p each. Rebus is expected to post a pretax, pre-exceptionals profit of £6.5 million for the year to the end of this month. Heath said rates in the UK market had been falling and competition "remained strong". Heath will pay a total dividend for 1995 of 6p in August, down from IIp last year, and Rebos will pay a dividend of 1.16p in July. Heath shares rose by 2p to

BA contract for General Electric

BY ROSS TIEMAN NDUSTRIAL CORRESPONDENT

GENERAL ELECTRIC has secured a £1.5 billion follow-on contract to repair and over-haul engines for the entire British Airways fleet of jet airliners.

The work, won in the face of competition from engine overhaul companies throughout the world, will be undertaken at the General Electric Aircraft Engine Services plant at Nantgarw, Mid Glamorgan. GE bought the operation for £274 million in 1991, in a deal that coincided with a BA decision to foresake its long-term key en-gine supplier. Rolls-Royce, in order to buy GE engines to power the airline's new Boeing

777 sub-jumbos. Under the agreement, GE will overhaul and repair engines ranging from the Rolls-Royce Olympus units that power BA's Concordes to the CFM units on its Airbus

George Duncanson, the GEAES managing director, said that the BA contract, and the resulting workload, would "serve as a springboard for GE engine services' global growth strategy."

A WORKING WEEK FOR: ROBERT WILSON

Mining chief with a mountain to climb

Jon Ashworth extracts globe-trotting details from the man who clocked up 125,000 miles in the air during merger negotiations alone

were careless

Monday O hursday riday U

FOURTEEN thousand feet up a moun-Fuesday I lain in Indonesia is no place to make the mining discovery of the century. One would not expect to find a cluster of diamond pipes under a lake in Canada's frozen north. Jungle or ice, the mining engineers will devise a way of reaching their hidden treasure. And the man who pushes the bunon to start things rolling might very well be Robert Wilson.

Wilson, 52, is probably the most powerful man in world mining today. He has just clinched the mammoth merger of two of the great mining houses, RTZ. based in London, with tentacles reaching around the globe, and CRA, based in Melbourne, and a household name on the Pacific Rim. As chief executive of RTZ-CRA, with a market capitalisation of $20 billion, and 44,000 employees. Wilson is orchestrating a round of musical chairs which has senior executives shuoling between the UK, Australia, Namibia and America. Hectic times lie ahead.

Grasherg mountain in Irian Java is one of the most impressive fears of mining one is ever likely to encounter. Widson visited suitably awed, "It's literally at the top of a mountain," he says, relaxing in an office that could not be more removed from the dust and heat of the rockface. "The mine site tends to get immersed in clouds by midday, and there is heavy rainfall as well. li's an extraordinarily remote location. The feeling of remoteness is quite different from any other mine site I've ever been to." The Grasberg visit was part of a weekly rourine that might take in a whirlwind lour of America, a board meeting in London, a multicountry video conference, and a night at the opera. Wilson took the easy way up the mountain - by helicopter - soaring past rainforest and mangroves towards the peak, which is literally being torn apart. The mine site at 14,000ft leads to a mill at 9,000ft, from where copper, goldcand silver are sent slooshing down a pipeline to the coast.

Over the border in Papua New Guinea, on remote Bougainville Island, is a kecation that Wilson will not be putting on his weekly touring list. Bougainville is a name that the planners at RTZ would just as soon forget. In 1972, construction began on what was the Grasberg of its dafabulously rich goldmine, carved out of Ethnic clashes began to take their toll. and RTZ was forced to pull out, leaving machinery, housing, vehicles - everything. No one has been back since. "It's been totally deserted by the company since 1989," says Wilson. "Quite what a state things are in is a bit difficult to judge, because we haven't had anybody up there since. It could be rehabilitated, I believe. I hesitate to think what the cost would be." The evacuation took place down a narrow corridor leading 25 miles to the coast. The company had built a road through the jungle, through the mountain, into the mine site. I would guess that road might well substantially need rebuilding now, because of landslides, because effectively a jungle takes over again if you just neglect it for 100 long."

Wilson encountered a different type of jungle earlier this month, when he unveiled the company's latest financial results. The logistics of running a global mining house were only 100 apparent. After a board meeting which saw directors fly in from around the world, Leon Davis, soon to take up residence in London as Wilson's right-hand man, flew back to Australia with Chris Bull, group finance direc-tor. They arrived in Melbourne on Thursday morning, leaving little time before the results flashed up at 2pm local time, In London, where it was 3am, staff diligently began issuing press releases.

says Wilson. "I wasn't one of them."

Wilson and his team had an actionpacked morning, briefing analysts at Sam, fund managers at 10am and journalists at noon. The presentations were linked by video-conference with the the site for the first time last year, and was redoubtable Davis and Bull, sitting in a studio in Melbourne. Wilson was suitably impressed by their stamina. By the time we finished the last meeting, which was around about Ipm or even a bit after that, it was past midnight over there, and those guys had been at it all day." Long-haul travel is un-avoidable at a group which has interests in so many countries. So far this year, Wilson has visited sites at Palabora and Richards Bay in South Africa. He leaves this weekend for America, starting in New York, where he will brief financiers, then proceeding to an investment mining conference in Phoenix, Arizona. A visit to Los Angeles rounds off a week-long trip. "We don't have a company plane," says Wilson. We have no corporate planes out of RTZ, except for local site planes where it may be difficult in terms of travel." The company occasionally charters aircraft to cope with difficult itineraries.

Wilson clocked up 125,000 air miles negociating the CRA merger, and has his seating preferences down to a tee. He spends between a quarter and a third of the year travelling abroad on trips of a comparatively short duration. Two or three directors spend well over half the year away from the UK. "It's simply a function of the nature of our business. We're spread all over the globe, and as long as we want to try and run this business from a very small head office, then it means that people are going to have to spend a lot of time travelling.

Video-conferencing points the way forward. "I can see a time in the future when our results' presentation is going to be a full 24-hour cycle, starting in Australia

The day on which Robert Wilson recently unveiled his company's results was a long one. "Lots of people started their day at 3am," he said. "I wasn't one of them" and finishing up in the States." Employees are treated to more mundane means of communication. "People have the great excitement of watching me on a video talking to them about whatever happens to be the interest of the day. But nothing is a proper substitute for face-to-face

No two weeks are the same at RTZ-CRA, but Wilson has something ap-proaching a typical day. He is usually at his desk by 8.30am until the evening whatever it needs to be". He does not have far to travel. "I used to live in Surrey. but it got to the point where I was moving up on Monday, going back on Friday, so we decided to move up lock, stock and barrel." He and his wife live in Kensingghter at university. Wilson does not come across as someone who lets his hair down outside office hours - he won't even admit to a thrill at seeing machinery in action - but he does have some outside interests. His eyes light up at the mention of opera one might well run into him at Covent Garden - and he enjoys classical concerts. "I don't think anyone wants to live under the continuous pressure of working 16 hours a day. I don't think ton. They have a soo away at school, and that's good for anybody. There needs to be some sort of mix of a normal social life. There are periods, obviously, when you have to live pretty intensely. Concluding the merger deal with CRA was rather demanding, but you don't have to live like that all the time." uesday ednesday

Wilson succeeds Sir Derek Birkin as chairman of RTZ-CRA in December. He enthuses about the potential of India, Latin America and the Pacif-

lc Rim, and of the scope for a dozen new projects. "The mining industry is really not that massive an industry worldwide, and a comparatively small number of mines make most of the money. I see our business as actually getting into as many of those really high-quality, long-term, profitable, mine opportunities, rather than force-fitting us into a company which is going to have a predetermined and necessarily arbitrary commodity

The enlarged RTZ-CRA is most heavily orientated towards Australia/New Zealand and North America, with 39 per cent and 32 per cent of sales revenue apiece. Opportunities in India and elsewhere may help to balance the portfolio. Foreign mining companies haven't been welcome in India until recently. But there clearly is potential for iron ore projects, for coal projects, mineral sands, maybe diamonds, bauxite."

One of the group's most exciting new finds is a diamond strike involving a cluster of Kimberlite pipes in Canada's Northwest Territories. Test drilling at the site suggests it could be producing 5 per cent of the world's gemstones within five years, if it proves viable. The main drawback is the location — under a lake in inhospitable terrain. "Our geologists were a bit careless in finding a deposit under a lake rather than on dry ground. But it's nearly all lakes up there."

The interview at an end, Wilson stands to shake hands, his suit immaculate, his office steeped in grandeur. On Grasberg, half, a world away, dust flies and machinery roars. And on distant Bougainville, jungle entwines with rusting metal, cloaked in silence.

A DISUSED railway viaduct in Somerset has to be Allied asset. Miles from any of the drinks group's offices or factories, the company happens to own the viaduct because of the passion for gardening of Francis Showering, the inventor of Babycham.

The viaduct, in Shepton Mallet stopped bearing trains more than 30 years ago, a victim of the Beeching cuts to the national rail network in the 1960s. A splendid, curving, 300-yard stretch of line owned by what was Somerset and Dorset Railways - known to locals as the "Slow and Dirty" - it was sold to the Showering drinks company for the grand sum of £5.

Mulberry is now in talks with Allied Domecq about buying the viaduct. It plans to use the structure as part of its 25th anniversary celebration in Joly, draping the whole thing in Mulberry fabric and staging an operatie performance on top.

Mulberry is restoring the gardens, under the guidance of its chairman and designer Roger Haul. The original lawns, waterfall, rock garden and paths are being preserved, and young oak and beech trees have been planted near the viaduct, to soften its appearance.

Guinness buyback keeps the index above 3,700

THE London Stock Market climbed back above the 3,700 level as more than a billion shares changed hands. But it was not the sort of performance that raging bull markets are made of. Several large program trades and a buyback programme conducted by Guinness accounted for at least 400 million of the 1.1 billion shares traded. Genuine retail demand left much to be

Surfing Kiwi radio waves

IF ANYONE had any doubts that New Zealano is for sale, the auction of Radio New Zealand should remove them. If GWR is successful with its £38 million hid, the Brinsh company will end up with a 75 per cent share of the New Zealand commercial radio market. Competition rules will reduce that to 65 per cent with the loss of a few licences, but a deal would give GWR a commanding position and a springboard for further expansion in Australasia.

GWR's business may be local, but its ambitions are clearly global. In the UK, opportunities are now limited; yesterday's proposed takeover of East Anglian Radio puts the company just over the 15 per cent ownership limit. The imminent award of new licences means that GWR will be able to complete the deal without trouble, but.

clearly, the rapid spate of corporate expansion in this country must now slow. That does not necessarily mean that profits growth will slow; revenues will increase rapidly, because radio's share of total advertising take should grow from 4 per cent to 5.5 per cent by the end of the decade. At the same time, cost-savings will accelerate growth; GWR generally manages to reduce overheads by 10 to 15 per cent on each acquisition. In New Zealand, the scope for savings is probably greater. Currently state-owned, the organisation has civil service manning levels and could, some reckon, cut its headcount by half.

GWR's fancy raning lets it contemplate a bid for East Anglian at an exit multiple in the mid-20s. Its own rating should not suffer, being supported by the large shareholders Emap and Capital Radio, and there is further to go.

C E Heath

SHARES in C E Heath crept up a few pence yesterday, hut that is scant reward for investors who bought the stock at the heady price of £4.50. They could be forgiven for asking why, when the price has fallen to £1.70, the dividend has been cut, and profits have been disappoinng, that Peter Presland. Heath's outgoing chief executive, has been waved off with a £300,000 severance payment and a new job at the head of Rebus. the computer services operation. The two divisions, broking and computing never really fitted, and the demerger offers the chance for the computer operation to strike out alone, unencumbered by the cyclicality of the UK insurance market.

Heath has given what amounts to a warning about the bulk of Mr Presland's current trading conditions, pointing to falling rales, stiff compention, and little prospect of strong growth this year. It also admits that Premium Search, the telephone motor insurance service that it launched in August 1994, is not expected to make a profit until 1998. Nevertheless. computing a competitive game, and experience is in broking. While it waits for shareholder approval for the scheme on April 15. CE Heath is vulnerable to a takeover bid, particularly from an overseas predalor. A likely candidate has yet to pounce, but would be the best hope for the shares which are currently stuck in the doldrums.

Wates

WATES City of London Properties is used to carrying all its eggs in one basket. The company has always specialised in City office buildings and paid dearly for its heavy exposure in the 1990 property market collapse. But yesterday's purchase of Britannic Tower in the City adds an ostrich egg to the collection.

Britannic will be the single higgest property in the portfolio and, when redeveloped and fully let, should account for more than half of the property group's assets. Even on the basis of the more conservative of Wates's two development plans, the total investment could be £100 million, a large commitment for a company with net assets of £158 million. A joint venture partner looks inevitable. A price of $30 million for more than 400,000 square mile looks cheap, but Wates has given away some of the upside to BP, the vendor.

DOLLAR RATES

When redeveloped and fully let, the latter's take could be nearer £40 million. Even so. Wates is sensible to get in all a low price, reducing its risk and sharing the upside. The company is being coy about its plans for the building, but substantial redevelopment is envisaged, including new re-

but the main attraction may be large dealing floors. The theory is that dealing floors will be in strong demand in two to three years' time when Wates is marketing the building, but that assumes the City is still in growth mode. The lack of enthusiasm for the shares yesterday reflects some scepncism, but it is more likely to stem from impatience with the lack of detailed financial information from Wates. The

Guinness

BY LEAPING into the market yesterday, Guinness has managed to repair some of the share price erosion that followed the previous day's announcement of a profits decline. The company had hinted that a share buyback was possible and the decision to act immediately suggests a real commitment to making bener use of its capital.

Full expenditure of the £460 million would take gearing to the 40 per cent level, not high but a level that leaves little room for big corporate activi-ty. That is in part a reflection of the lack of opportunities the most desirable white spirit brand is not for sale - but Guirness now has the chance to prove it can achieve more from its core brands. LVMH did not take part in the buyback, which suggests at least there is more to go for.

good in five years Homeowners face summer

insurers are taking no chances this year

insurers are giving warn-ing that thousands of homeowners face another summer of subsidence and structural damage because the winter has not been wet enough to replace moisture in clay soil, common in the South East,

The large insurers have each paid about £20 million to policyholders whose houses shifted and cracked when the earth around the foundations dried out in the heat wave.

"The winter has just not heen wet enough. Unless we get a lot more rain subsidence claims are likely to be high again this year," said David Prosser, chief executive of Legal & General, tan Brett-Pitt, subsidence claims manager at Direct Line, agreed. "We could see it happening again this summer. During last year's drought the worst affected areas were Southampton, parts of Hampshire, north London, Guildford, Kent, the Midlands, Manchester and Yorkshire. People with homes built on clay are worst affect-

"The other problem is caused by trees: conifers, poplars, flowering cherry trees and willows are the worst. A large tree can take 10.000 sillons of water out of the soil every year — that is equivalent to a full tanker. Unfortunately, people plant trees close to their nomes and use conifers as a screen, with the result that they upset the water balance in in the Easter hulidays should think carefully about the effect this will have on their house foundations." Structural engi-neers, who in the past used underpinning as the solution to all subsidence problems. are now more likely to monitor ing action. Even when a tree has been proved to be the culprit, the solution is not always simple.

Although trees can be pruned and managed to reduce their demand for water, some have preservation orders on them Mr Brett-Pitt said. Other causes of subsidence Underground pipes leaking or poor drainage beneath the house can cause the soil to become waterlogged and to sink. This is particularly prevalent in Manchester. In parts of London, light industry formerly removed large quanti-ties of water from the soil.

for cover. Some insurers are "redlining" certain areas where they refuse cover altogether, while others demand that homeowners commission expensive' structural engineers' reports before getting

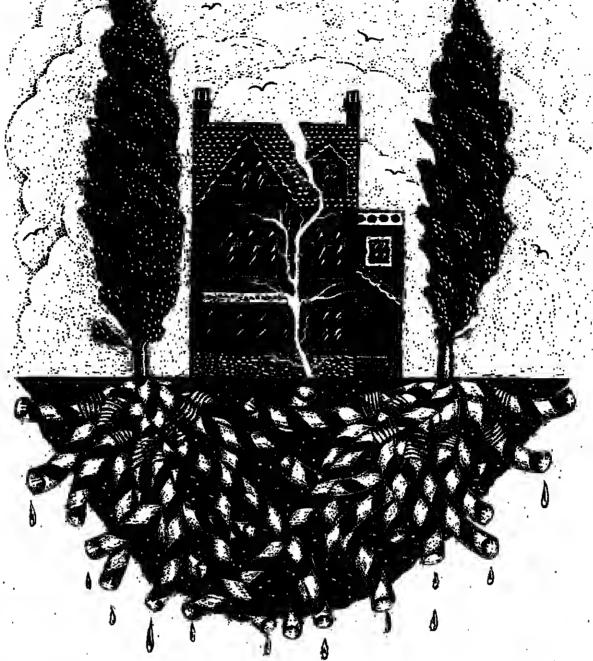

Insurers are stepping up their use of sophisticated geo-logical data which allow them to pinpoint the riskiest areas. Premiums are still based on use the first letter of the second part of postcodes as well as the first part, which they started using in 1991. This narrows the number of houses down to in each area to about 1,500. Some use the whole postcode, targeting just a few homes. Few insueres now raise buildings premiums across the board as they used to, targeting instead the most risky areas within postcodes for

This targeting has taken some households out of high-risk categories, cutting their premiums substantially. Brian Bundy, branch director at C. P. Hasth the broker said: C. E. Heath, the broker, said: "Some of our clients have had their premiums cut by half." But the risky remainder will see rises in premiums and long searches for cover. "I know some insurers are redlining because I have clients who have tried and been lold they can't get insurance in their area," said Mr Bundy.

Homeowners in the most subsidence-prone areas face paying up to three times the going rate for their buildings

Robert Hooker of the Subsidence Claims Advisory Bureau said: There are constantly more areas where will admit to redlining of whole areas but they admit there are certain properties they do not want to cover. Sellers trying to move as the housing market improves are finding their properties blighted by valuers pointing out cracks and suggesting they could besubsidence.

In a majority of cases, the cracks will be harmless. But by then, prospective buyers will have gone elsewhere rather than be forced to spend several hundred pounds on a structural survey to satisfy their mortgage lender.

Valuers are desperate to avoid being sued by lenders for not noticing structural defects. Lenders took action against a number of surveyors in the early 1990s, claiming they had overvalued properties, causing lenders losses. Mr Bundy said: "Surveyors are very careful. They see a crack and see a possible subsidence claim. Ten years ago they wouldn't have worried." Geoff Holden of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors said valuers would not immedialely diagnose subsidence but would tell a buyer to take further advice. The Subsidence Claims

When the tree just had to go

Last August, as reported by The Times, Mary Burriss came back from holiday to find a 5-ft crack in one of the interior walls of her house. The surveyor sent by Pearl, ber insurer, identified a much-loved tree near the house as the culprit (Sara McConnell writes).

Two weeks ago, the tree was felled, much to Mrs Burriss's regret. "It was such a lovely tree." she said. But if the surveyor's diagnosis proves right, the tree hid a destructive streak. Mrs Burriss's daughter, Roisin McManus, said the original crack has since got wider and crack has since got wider and bigger and spread from one corner of the room to the other.

Now the family is waiting for Pearl to decide what to do next. The hope is that the problem will solve itself as rainfall restores moisture removed by the tree and the earth settles. The prospect of underpin-ning fills Mrs McManus with alarm. "If they suggest underpinning, my mother will be hysterical", she said.

Carried away by water bids

hareholders in water companies may feel bemused. In Leeds, Trevor Newton, accountant and managing director of Yorkshire Water. has fallen on his sword ahead of a public inquiry set up by the company to flagellate itself and seek absolution. Yet the shares boom. In London, Mike Hoffman, dynamic chief executive of Thames Water, left the industry suddenly on Thursday, drawing a line under Thames's long, disastrous foray into engineering construction. The shares rose. Further West, Severn Trent joined Wessex in a race to take over South West, perennial poor relation of the ten privatised groups.

Bemused as we may be, these seemingly unconnected events are all part of a process started in 1989, in guidance given to the companies at privatisation. If they were competent, they were guaranteed decent returns for at least five years, to persuade investors to sink £30 billion to bring our creaking water and sewage system up to scratch. Then water would revert to beng dull and heavily regulated, so they better diversify to give some "medium-term" fizz.

Thames jumped in first, buying PWT, a big but unprofitable internacional water contractor, for a song. Anglian and Yorkshire were highly cautious. But Sir Gordon Jones. Yorkshire's retiring chairman, knighted for his patient skill in leading the industry to privatisation. later revealed that his board team had to devote a third of its time to diversification, a third to regulators and just a third actually to run the unlity. This was typical. Creative openings in operating be a lot bigger than expected. Diversification was often a costly failure. Finance directors floated to the top. Empire builders from outside fell like ninepins. from Northumbrian via North West to Severn Trent, where John Bellak, its engaging but prickly chairman, was bagged by City critics after an expensive move into solid waste. Mr Hoffman turned his zeal back to the core, scoring a success with the Thames ring main, but those loss-breeding bad buys kept coming back to haunt him. Mr Newton, a master of the regulatory game, was complacent about the basics in an area normally cushioned by high rainfall.

A new generation of water bosses, plus a few canny originals, learnt crucial lessons at the feet of Ian Byatt, their regulator. Their main asset is skill at running utilities. That embraces innovative solutions to sewage problems, but also transferable skills in billing, service, information technology, cost-cutcustomers of a local monopoly.

Brussels has imposed more investment, extending growth potential. Most drastically, however, expiry of golden shares has transferred power to grasping City fund managers, upsetting the balance between investors, regulators and customers. To satisfy all, big financial risks have to be taken, gearing up with debt. Only Wessex was fully pre-pared, focusing effort on its utility and local relations, while bringing in a big American partner to finance expansion into waste. Others are catching up. Welsh, a quick learner, and North West have bought local power companies. People in the South West were badly served by privatisation. Relatively few locals had to pay dearly to cure water scarcities and leagues of dirty beaches for the benefit of summer vistors. A political drive to stem soaring prices trimmed investment at the last review. So Wessex and North West have much to offer: price cuts to locals, faster beachcleaning to Surfers against Sewage.

They present Mr Byatt with a dilemma; he had set his heart against mergers among the ten. If he bends for the sake of Cornish folk. there will be others. Thames, under a caretaker regime, will court the City with cash to fend off adjacent French giant Générale des Eaux, which might also eye Southern. Takeover fever is heady for investors. But don't be carried away. Greater risk, and more stifling regulation under an ambitious new denizen of Ofwat, may be round the corner.

All smiles: After the euphoria of John Major's election win in April 1992, disillusionment quickly set in, culminating in Norman Lamont pulling Britain out of the ERM in September

A good time to take stock of the equity phenomenon

London, have shaken investors out of their pleasant slumber after a year in which it seemed that equities could only go higher. The renewed instability offers a good oppor-tunity for investors to pause to consider how equity markets have moved during the Nineties and where they are expected to go by the end of the

The recent market blip may be unsettling, but the losses were insignificant in comparison with the events of October 1987 when the Dow Jones industrial average, the main US market index, dropped 508 points or 22.6 per cent in one day, triggering a 10 per cent fall in the value of shares on the London Stock Exchange. Indeed, the 1980s were a decade of dramatic rises and falls as markets adjusted to an incredible boom, followed by recession, in the United States and Europe. The 1990s, in contrast, have proved calmer.

The decade started on a dull note. At the beginning of January 1990, the FT-SE 100 was at 2,463.7, while the Dow Jones industrial average started the decade at 2,809.73. During the year, the dollar suffered a large loss in value. putting pressure on share prices around the world. The beginning of 1991 brought the Gulf War, which proved a turning point for markets. After the depression caused by the invasion of Kuwait, the quick Allied victory injected a taste of muchneeded optimism. By late summer, both the FTSE 100 and the Dow Jones industrial average had inched back to their pre-1987-crash levels.

Despite steady declines through the end of the year. both indices ended 1991 much higher than they started. Spring of 1992 brought concern that a Labour government would harm investors and big business alike. But April 1992 brought an unex-pected electoral victory for John Major, and the markets responded by rising steadily through June before falling back in late summer, partly over concern about ERM, which was stopping the Gov-ernment expanding the economy out of recession.

In September, Norman Lamont took Britain out of ERM and equities posted steady gains through 1993 and into February 1994, when the FTSE 100 topped 3,500 to set a cle on a three-year run.

amounts into shares. So what do analysts expect of the market in the coming years? Market bulls expect it to continue to be supported by savers looking for long-term investments. With interest rates at exceedingly low levels, they expect the money to keep pouring into the market.

The accepted wisdom is that equities offer the best longterm home for savings. According to BZW, £100 invested in equities in 1945 with dividends reinvested net of basic rate tax would have grown to £21.814 at the end of 1995. The equivalent building society fund would be worth £10,040.

But some are starting to question whether this trend will continue. Robin Aspinall, chief economist at Panmure Gordon, says: "We've had thirty years or more of the cult of the equity. The outperformance of the equity market in that time was phenomenal, driven by the amount of money pouring into the mar-ket which distorted valuations. Now we are in a decade of transition and are marking time while the valuations have a chance to return to more reasonable levels, with the gap between gilts and equities

Joe Rooney, global equities manager at Lehman Brothers, is more positive about the US market than the UK, although

The fundamentals in the US are good. Inflation is low and companies are generating good levels of profitability and retaining a good deal of that profitability within the company to generate future earning growth, so the market is not looking excessively priced," he says.

r Rooney believes the UK market looks heavily priced because British companies are not investing enough to safe-guard their future profitability, while at the same time paying shareholders very high dividends. "If you took a point four years out, the probablity is that the UK market will be lower than it is today," he says

Allison Southey, global strategist at Nomura, believes that "in the next 15 years the overall attitude towards inflation will change and we will embrace it as a way to quash other problems, such as high unemployment. In the long term that will not be good for equities." It would be even worse for fixed interest investments.

These bearish sentiments do not mean that private investors should panic about their equity investments, it is, of course, quite possible that the bears will be proved wrong and equities will go from strength to strength. But this might be a good time to look very carefully at your portfolio, and perhaps to consider geographic diversification.

A QUESTION OF MONEY

Ins and outs of APR can baffle any borrower

Dity poor, hapless APR Designed to clear up the confusion over lending rates, it has failed to keep up with the cut and thrust of today's credit card, mortgage and personal loan markets and is itself now accused of being confusing.

What is annual percentage rate (APR)?

Annual Percentage Rate is the compulsory measure of the cost of credit. It includes interest plus any other charges that consumers have to pay. It is meant to enable consumers to compare the true cost of credit, but, with changes in products, there are now many loopholes in APR

How do the credit Q card issuers calculate

Credit card issuers A use a formula to calcu late APR. It takes account of compound interest (or interest charged on interest) each month for a year. However. APR regulations pre-date the introduction of an annual fee, which has caused something of a mathematical headache. The annual fee has to be converted into a percentage to allow it to be incorporated into an APR and that, says the industry's Credit Card Research Group, is an artificial calculation.

Other blips include disagreement among lenders as to whether an interestfree period (or the lack of one) should be included in the APR and disagreement about the credit limit at which an APR is calculated. In 1992, all credit card issuers voluntarily agreed to use the same credit limit, of £1,000. However, the Cooperative uses a limit of £3,000 on its low-interest Gold Card.

That lessens the impact of the £120 annual fee, since the more you borrow, the less the fee works out as a percentage. Similarly, American Express, which charges a £20 fee after the first year, quotes on a limit

Lenders say that borrowers should look at the monthly rate. However, be warned that 1.67 per cent a month sounds small, but, on an outstanding balance, can add up to more than 20 per cent a year.

It is best to think in terms of pounds and pence: the "cost of borrowing". Simply ask each lender how much it will cost you to borrow £1,000 over a year.

The APR on mort-gages seems very low. Is this right?

The Consumers Association says that annual percentage rates on mortgages are "detached from reality". There are now many mortgages on offer with low fixed or discounted rates in the early years, but the quoted APR will be misleading.

It will be artificially low because it has to be calculated as if the low rate applied for the entire mortgage term. In fact, once the fixed term ends, you will pay the much higher variable rate for the rest of the life of the mortgage. The Consumers' Association also claims that lenders leave out fees such as the mortgage indemnity guarantee.

Similarly, with endowment mortgages, the APR calculation will not include the cost of the endowment premiums because they are not paid to the mortgage lender.

Since the APR does not tell you the full story, it is better for borrowers to look at the actual monthly cost, both now and at the end of the discounted or fixed-rate

han it

Bank overdrafts need A careful watching. Calculation of the APR is not set hy law, as it is for most other kinds of credit, and lenders tend to quote an effective annual rate - EAR - which does not include transaction charges levied for going into the red or those letters that the bank sends you. Lenders can also omit fees from their APR calculations.

The APR on personal loans should, in contrast, be a useful guide since the size of the debt and its length are fixed from the outset.

However, the increasing popularity of payment protection insurance has muddied the waters. When insurance is compulsory, the APR should reflect the cost. If, however, it is simply available or recommended, the cost can be excluded from the APR.

The redemption penalty for paying off a loan early will also not be included the APR.

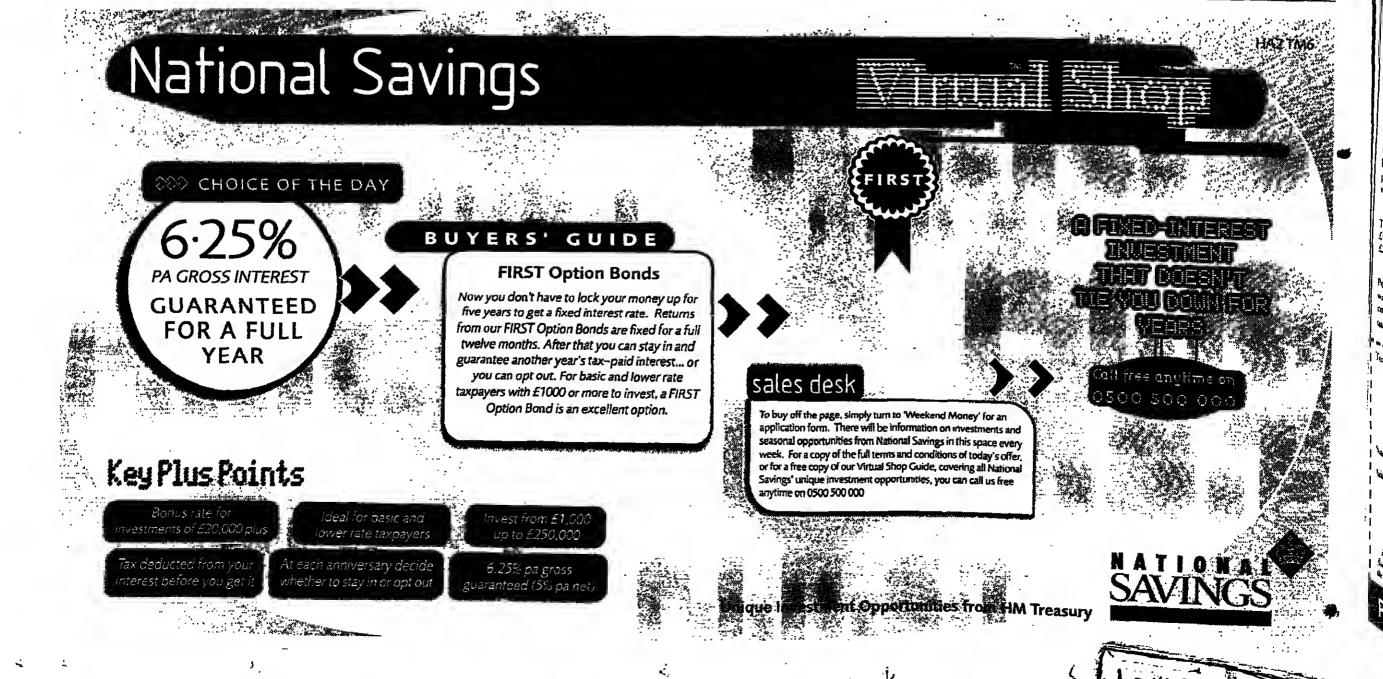

Q calculation of APRs Will the method of now be changed?

Not in the short term. Two years ago, the Office of Fair Trading published a report on the Consumer Credit Act.

It included a specific recommendation that there be changes to the way in which APRs are calculated and disclosed to improve their usefulness for comparing credit terms. That has not been acted upon by the Government.

However the European Union is currently looking at proposals for a common method of calculating APRs.

But, as other building society cooversion and takeover deals show, the two-year rule is open to interpretation. The payout to the N&P successors is itself a compromise reached after what the N&P calls "long conversations" between the N&P and the Building Societies Commission, the watchdog. For example, most haven't been able to compete against the returns of a Standard Life managed growth PEP - £13,615 return.*

Standard Life managed growth PEP is without initial or exit charges, and there is only a difference of 0.5% between the buying and selling price of units. The annual management charge is 1.5%.

Sarah Jones puts the case for getting the choice of your new Tessa correct

Favourite auntie with a bad flaw

long with Tessa 2. Tessa's linle sister. Guaranteed Tessa, her auntie, is making a regular appearance these days. And she is everyone's favnurite aunnie, it seems, Providers report that the majority of second-time Tessa savers are going for the fixed-rate, rather than the variable-rate option. Five years on from now though, she might not look so

Interest on a variable-rate Tessa will move up and down with the bank or building society's variable rate, which is linked to changes in the base rate. A fixed-rate Tessa pays one rate throughout the fiveyear life of the account, Variations on the theme include escalator Tessas offering a fixed rate guaranteed to rise each year for the five years. This week's batch of fixedrate Tessas include National & Provincial's Guaranteed Tessa at 7 per cent. It is open to both existing Tessa holders and newcomers. However, the latter have to commit the full £9,000 which is put into a feeder account. The TSB has reissued its fullow-on Tessa with a rate of 7.4 per cenu. equivalent of a guaranteed return of £12.850, Newcomers get a lower 7 per cent. The Royal Bank of Scotland's new follow-on Tessa has a fixed rate which rises each year, starting at 7 per cent in year one and reaching II per cent in the final year. That gives an effective annual rate of 7.71 per cent, or a maturity value of £13,051. One of the best fixed rates around, it is still topped by two current variable Tessas, from Northern Rock (8 per cent) and the Cheltenham & Gloucester (7.75 per cent).

Fixed rates of about 7 per cent have looked good to savers as the base rate slides to 6.25 per cent and variable to get much beyond 6.75 per cent. However many analysts believe that savers might be bener off avoiding fixed rates. as rates could rise over a new Tessa's five-year term.

lan Millward of Chase de Vere says: "Interest rates move in eveles and we are currently at the bottom of the cycle, the worst time to go into a fixedrate investment. Nobody anlicipates interest rates climhing back to 15 per cent in the next five years, but they only have to go up to 8 per cent and your Tessa fixed at 7 per cent is no longer a good deal. By 1ying themselves in, riskaverse savers are actually exposing themselves to risk by going for a fixed rate."

thers are more san-guine. There are some good fixed deals around at the moment and that may be preferable to variable rates which at the outset look attractive but then sink," says Alastair Altham of Johnson Fry Asset Managers. However, you must be sure that you can lock your money away for five years. The penalfor withdrawing from fixed-rate Tessas can be very severe, as much as 180 days loss of interest."

For savers trying to hedge their bets, Birmingham Midshires is offering an account fixed at 0.75 per cent for two years before moving to a variable rate. Similarly, West Bromwich has an account with a 6 per cent fixed rate and the option on the third anniversary to move to a higher 7.5 per cent fixed rate or move to the variable rate. Abbey National's follow-on Tessa. fixed at 6.8 per cent, will pay a bonus of 1 per cent of the capital balance in each year in which the average base rate exceeds the previous year's average base rate by at least 1

Providers, 100, seem divided over whether new issues of fixed rates should be going up or down. TSB. for example, has increased its fixed-rate Tessa from 7.05 per cent to 7.4 per cent, while West Bromwich has dropped its rate from 7.55 per cent to 7.10 per cent.

THE TESSA

TESSAS, tax-exempt special savings accounts, were introduced five years ago. They allow you to invest up to £9,000 in a savings account and receive the interest taxfree, on condition you do not withdraw the original investment for five years. The maximum investment in the first year is £3,000 and £1,800 in subsequent years up to the £9,000, with a limit of one Tessa per adult. When this Tessa matures, the original investment but not the interest earned on it can be reinvested in another Tessa. Savers have up to six months to decide whether to reinvest in another Tessa, but be warned a matured Tessa loses it's tax-free status and most providers will transfer them into accounts paying little more than 4 per cent gross per

The new tax rules that could launch a big paper chase

Karen Zagor on why it is vital to keep your financial records up new self-assessment tax rules. That is the message from the Inland Revwhich this week launched an advertising campaign to warn all jaxpayers to keep records of earnings and expenditure.

The 20 million people who don't get lax returns don't have to worry about self-assessment," says a Revenue spokeswoman. But they still need to keep records because if their circumstances change, they will need to have their paperwork in order." Record-keeping for tax purposes can be onerous. In the US taxpayers are accustomed to hoarding shop receipts. cheque stubs, credit card bills and bank statements. Few people have a kind word to say about the process. Heather Masri, a US graduate student, has passed on the burden of filling in tax forms to her husband. "Before I got married, I filed my own returns. The worst part of it was going through a shoe box filled with receipts and picking out all sorts of things to deduct from this massive pile of papers, then adding them up and realising that the total amounts were smaller than the standard deductions." Ms Masri said it usually took her four hours to sort through the paperwork, without counting the extra time spent chasing missing forms. I don't earn much money, but if you have anything extra, like a bank savings account you have to get an addendum to the tax form. The bank doesn't always send you one so you have to go to the bank or post office for an extra form, which they never seem to have, and that takes time." Maria Silber, also of New York, says the process is "so horrible that I pay an accountant $250 a year to do my taxes. even though my situation is fairly straightforward. It's hard to keep up with every change in tax law, so you pay an accountant to know these fn the UK, the Revenue is assuring taxpayers that the new tax structure will not impose an undue burden. "For most people, record-keeping means keeping your P60 form. If you have got building society savings, keep your statements. For most employed people, it's not much." But the truth of the matter is that if you claim any allowances, including the married couple's allowance, you will have to be able to provide evidence that you qualify. Hywel Jones of the Chartered Institute of Taxation

To one is safe from the Consumer Policy Review: "Many taxpayers who have completed their own tax returns in the past may feel intimidated by the volume of the new return." He says nine million taxpayers may be affected by the new system.

From April, you will have a legal obligation to keep all relevant records to complete an accurate tax return. You will need to keep records of tax you have paid and any records you may need to make a claim. Records need to be kept for UK pension or social security benefits as well as interest dividends or other income from UK savings, investments or trusts. You must also be able to provide evidence of capital gains or allowable losses.

If you use inheri-tance or windfall money to fund an investment, keep copies of any correspondence.

Documents relating to any other income, such as alimony or maintenance. ☐ For capital gains or allowable losses, you must keep records on the purchase and sale, lease or exchange of assets. You should also retain details of any assets you have given away or put into trust.

What if I claim benefits?

You must be able to document any claims. For example, you may be asked to produce charitiable deeds of covenant if you claim relief for donations to charity, or you may have to show a marriage certificate if you claim the married couple's allowance.

UNLIMITED POTENTIAL MINIMUM 25% THE KEY THING IS, THERE'S NO RISK

It's widely recognised that the Japanese Lstockmarket offers huge potential...but dare you invest in it?

The GA Japanese Guaranteed Growth Bond is your chance to benefit from the gains in the Japanese stockmarket WITHOUT risking your capital.

This is because, at the end of the 5 1/2 year term you are GUARANTEED to receive back your initial investment plus 25%, or the growth in the Nikkei 300 Index, whichever is higher.

The GA Japanese Guaranteed Growth Bond is a lump sum investment.

The growth in the Japanese stockmarket is measured by the performance of the Nikkei 300 Index applied to 95% of your initial investment.

To protect against any last minute falls in the level of the Index, an average of the daily Index value over the last 24 months of the investment will be used to calculate the final return.

Please note, the guarantee only applies at the end of the term. If you cash in your investment before then, you will receive the full value of the underlying investments. However, you should be aware that this value will fluctuate and there may be circumstances particularly early in the term, where you could receive an amount less than your original capital sum.

Robert Miller on two investment stars and the Japanese factor

Reputations at The cult of turning fund managers into investment stars and promoting trusts on the back of that fame is an interesting, if stake in battle sometimes flawed, concept. Flawed because, for all we know, the manager might just have got lucky and been in the right market at the right time. This weekend, however, inof heavyweights vestors have a choice between two fund managers who have every right to call attention to

If you are looking for a specific exposure to Japan then the Atlantis Japan Growth fund should at least make the shortlist. If, however, you want a sound and consistent investment trust. where the manager makes all the decisions for you, then F&C has to be a very strong contender. A final point is that both F&C and Atlantis Japan are non-qualifying trusts in personal equity plan terms and only £1,500 can be ringfenced in them. F&C does, however, offer you a chance to make up the difference to E6,000 in other F&C trusts.

Analysts welcome TR's hostile bid

THE hostile bid launched this week by TR Pacific Investment Trust on Thornton's Asian Emerging Markets Investment Trust is not so much ruthless as just plain no-nonsense (writes Robert Miller).

TR Pacific, managed by Michael Watt, is a top performer in its sector and its shares trade at a premium to the net asset value of the underlying portfolio. Thornton Asian languishes at the other end of the performance scales and its shares trade at a discount.
The TR Pacific bid offers Thornton

Asian shareholders new TR Pacific Ordinary shares or a cash alternative to those investors who want an exit route. If the TR bid is successful, it will cut the annual management fee to 0.9 per cent. To overcome the problem posed by Thornton Asian's holdings in unlisted Chinese investments, TR proposes to strip these out and issue "C" or Conversion shares in respect of them.

Jain Dale, chairman of TR Pacific. says: "Our offer provides Thornton Asian shareholders with an attractive opportunity to exchange their Thorntoo Asian shares for securities which enjoy a better market rating, and in the board's opinion, offer better prospects for the future, while providing an immediate solution to the problem of ChinaVest." Thornton Asian, which is due to be woundup this autumn, had already called an extraordinary general meeting to consider its future possibly involving a restructuring as an open-ended fund. In light of the TR bid, Thornton Asian'a board advised investors to take no immediate action. Investment trust analysts welcomed TR's move. Hamish Buchan of NatWest Securities said the bid "made a lot of sense". Peter Walls of Credit Lyonnais Laing said: "This is construction or corrective corporate activity and we welcome it."

largest private motor insurer, is about to break into what its chief executive Ian Chippendale calls the "cosy, rip-off world of travel insurance". It will begin testing single-trip and annual policies this summer, and expects to have a full product range in place by spring 1997.

Some travel agents make 40 per cent commission on travel insurance policies sold with package holidays. The Office of Fair Trading is so con-cerned about the practice that it launched a study last year and expects to make its findings public within three weeks. Direct Line, which prompted a price war in the motor insurance market by cutting out commission paid to brokers, has given warning that it intends to do the same for travel insurance.

As holidaymakers travel to more adventurous destinations, they need more insurance cover. No insurer will cover countries which the Home Office has advised British tourists to avoid. Others warn holidaymakers about areas with high crime rates. In Peru, bombings are commonplace. In Jamaica, walking or taking public transport at night is not advised and in The Gambia the political situation is worsening. Anyone taking out travel insurance should obey a few simple rules.

Policy type: It is important to choose a policy according to how many times you go on holiday each year. Annual policies, which cover any number of holidays taken during the year, are becoming popular. But they may limit the length of an individual trip.

Level of cover: If you are sports while you are away. such as scuba diving or white water rafting, it is important to make sure that the policy covers you. Some, such as that offered through Thomas Cook, will automatically cover you for these extra activities, with others you pay extra.

Doubling up: It is worth checking to see whether any of your existing policies give you some sort of cover. It could be ums this way. Cover for baggage, for instance, comprises about 30 per cent of premiums, and you may already be covered under your household insurance.

Follow the conditions: It is important to check that you fulfil all the conditions of making a claim. For example, if you are robbed, you may not be able to make a claim unless you have police corroboration.

The right route for US car insurance

lion UK residents who visit the US each year will hire a car for their holidays. Those taking advantage of the many "fly-drive" deals offered will automatically get a car as part of the package, while others will choose to hire a car when they get to their destination.

Tour operators point out that it is imperative to understand the intricacies of the insurance they are taking out. they do not, they risk ruin. Matthew financial who went on holiday to the US last year, face such a predicament.

Mr France and Pilkington were involved in a collision with a motorcycle while on a Los Angeles highway. Unfortunately, one of those on the motorcycle fractured their skull, and, in a move which is commonplace in the US, they decided to sue the couple for damages. medical costs and loss of earnings.

Mr France believed he would be covered for the litigation under his travel insurance policy, which he took out with Thomas Cook. It offered £2 million public liability insurance.

owever, to his consternation he found L that his policy did not cover anything "arising directly or indirectly from the ownership or use of motorised vehicles. To be completely and adequately insured, he would have needed to take out extra cover on top of the motor insurance cover he did take out. Mr France claims: "We were told by Thomas Cook that we had all the necessary insurance, so we did not take out any extra." Mr France has hired lawvers in both the UK and in the US to help him fight his action, in which he could end up being liable for $1million. His solicitors are hoping to team up with the motorcyclist's solicitors to bring a case against Thomas Cook. Bob Clark, commercial insurance products manager, points out that all travel insurance policies exclude car accidents under their public liability cover. Mr Clark adds: The minimum amount of liability insurance people are obliged to take out in America varies from state to state. For example, in Florida it is $20,000. This minimum compensation is very low in a country where the maximum awards are very high."

He advises anyone planning to hire a car in the US to take out the liability insurance supplement: For example: US insurer AIG has a policy Topsure, which will provide extra cover of up to $1m.Mr Clark says: "The extra cover costs around E5 a day."

"I couldn't believe my ears when Exeter Friendly said that the age I take out medical insurance, is the age I stay at.

You see, Exeter are the only insurer who don't put up your premiums just because you get older. Which saves money now, and literally thousands and thousands of pounds over the years. The only increases they ever make are done directly in line with medical inflation.

That's all very well, I said, but won't that mean reduced benefits?

Then they explained that because Exeter are a friendly society with no shareholders to pay, all the profits go back into the company. So not only are the premiums lower, but the benefits are often better than those offered by other leading insurers.

It takes years off my age just thinking about it."

ash is still king around much of the world. The mighty greenback remains the favourite method of payment from the street bazaars of Cairo to the chic shops of Hong Kong.

Yet if you are returning to Britain from abroad with a large sum in dollars it is a very different story. My father is an American resident. I see him infrequently and on my last visit he gave me $15,000 in crisp $100 bills to cover Christmas and birthday presents over the coming year for his seven English grandchildren and their parents.

It seemed sensible to keep commission and bank charges to a minimum by exchanging the sum in one transaction and then distributing the money around the family in sterling.

I consulted my account manager at the National Westminster bank in Orpington, Kent; where I have banked for more than 20 years. I was told that the bank's maximum commission was £15, no matter how large the sum. My best course, I was advised, was simply to pay the cash direct into my NatWest account. When the NatWest was asked to turn $15,000 into sterling there was a considerable sting in the tail

I did so and thought no more of it until two months later when I received the regular quarterly bank statement. The sum credited was just above £9,200. A quick back-of-the-envelope calculation suggested that at about 1.52 dollars to the pound, the sum should have been nearer

The bank denied that there had been any mistake. Yes, the commission was only £15. But, they now explained belatedly, they offer a different exchange rate for cash deposits in foreign currency to cover their "handling charges". And it is some difference. To handle my 150 crisp new bills the bank had offered just 1.63 dollars to the pound. Although I had been acting on the Nat-West's own advice on how to minimise charges on the transaction, the bank had ended up taking more than £650 out of the children's gifts from their grandfather. At no point had NatWest told me that there was a different - and highly disadvantageous - rate for cash

I pointed out that I could have handled the transaction cheaper myself by flying back to America and asking my father for a cheque. Eventually NatWest offered a refund of £300 as a "gesture of goodwill". Even so, I had still paid more than £350 for their sections.

NatWest said: "Unfortunately Mr

Did you know that to receive the maximum pension available, you would typically have to be a member of the same company pension scheme for 40 years?

Or that changing your job, even once, could dramatically reduce your pension? So that, just when you have more time to enjoy life, you have less money.

Topping up your company pension with an Equitable Free-Standing Additional Voluntary Contribution Scheme can help bridge the gap.

You make contributions from your gross income, with tax relief at the highest rate you pay.

Remember that the value of tax relief available will depend on individual circumstances, and that current legislation can change in the future.

What's more, we don't believe in paying commission to third parties for the introduction of new business.

Keep company with a good scheme

Helen Pridham on why it is vital to find out what contribution your employer is making to your future

ince 1988, employers have not been allowed to make it compulsory for employees to join an occupational pension scheme. But if you are offered the chance of joining a company scheme it is rarely advisable to refuse.

The biggest advantage of belonging to a scheme is that your employer will be making a contribution to your future pension on top of any savings you make. Indeed, with some occupational schemes, the employer pays the full cost.

According to the National Association of Pension Funds's 1995 Annual Survey, employees last year were expected to contribute an average of 4.6 per cent of their earnings to their schemes, while employ-ers paid in 7.1 per cent. In schemes where employees were not expected to contribute, employers stumped up an verage of 10.1 per cent. With most schemes, though, employers' contributions vary from year to year because they pay whatever is necessary to meet the on-going cost of the scheme. There are often other scheme membership,

Currently half of all company employees belong to an occupational pension scheme. The two main types of occupational pension schemes are:

☐ Final salary schemes: These traditional schemes. which still make up the majority of those currently in exis-tence, promise a fixed amount of pension in relation to your final salary at retirement for each year you work for an employer. A frequent build-up is 1/60th of final salary for each year of membership of the scheme. The maximum permitted pension is twothirds of final salary, but since it normally requires 40 years continuous service with one employer to achieve this maximum, very few people ever

They are especially advantageous for those with long service. whose earnings increase towards retirement. Employers are growing less keen on them, though, because of the open-ended financial commit-

☐ Money purchase schemes: In recent years an increasing number of employers have introduced these schemes which require fixed contributions from both employers and to be fairer to those who move have the cash in hand or jobs.

Until relatively recently, employers were often not very good at communicating the merits of their pension schemes to employees, particularly the fact that they were paying into the schemes on behalf of their employees or the continuing benefits of an occupational pension in retirement. This is undoubtedly the reason why some people in the he adds: The problem is that the young people will find it very difficult to make up these contributions in years to come, while those who think they are only going to be with an employer for a short time are often still there five years later."

Fortunately, however, even you have declined membership of a scheme in the past, most employers will still allow you into a scheme for future

Many people were put off occupational pensions by the Maxwell affair. However the Pensions Act which comes into effect in April 1997 will introduce a variety of measures designed to improve considerably the financial security of pension scheme

Since 1986, people changing jobs have had the legal right to transfer their pension rights out of their old employer's pension scheme to their next employer's scheme or to their own individual pension plan. This can be advantageous but it is vital to get professional

Jim Brooks, development manager for Clerical Medical, the insurer, says: "Transfers are not always advantageous especially if your old employer gives generous post-retirement discretionary increases

The PEP that stands out

Every PEP provides exactly the same tax reliefs, but not exactly the same investment performance.

What you want out of your PEP, whether it's this year's, next year's or any year's, is a high return on your investment.

This is why you simply can't afford to overlook JUPITER. Over the five years to 1st March 1996, a £6,000 PEP investment in the JUPITER Income Trust would have turned into £18,845'. That's more than three times the original investment.

In the same period, the trust substantially outperformed all the 72 competing funds in the UK Equity Income Sector, and beat its closest rival by over 30%'.

Add the security of investing with an award-winning, £5 billion fund management group that is a subsidiary of Germany's third largest bank, Commerzbank, and you can see why you can't afford to ignore this PEP.

Demand high as Peps are offered at a bargain price

personal equity plan based on unit trusts from a top investment house for as

The price war, which has been raging among the Pep product providers over the last three years, has now spread to the independent financial advisers selling the products themselves. Discounting has caught the imagination of the public, and unit trust companies are reporting a big surge in business as the end of the tax

When unit trust Peps were first introduced a few years ago, it would have been un-thinkable that charges would fall to this level. Then, investors had to pay for the Pen wrapping, as well as a 5 to 6 per cent initial charge. It is now cheaper to invest through a Pep, than it is to buy the underlying investments. The discounts offered are usually in the region of 3 per cent — this is the equivalent to the amount of initial commission the independent financial adviser would have earned on the deal. On a Pep investment of £6,000, this represents a saving of £180.

The adviser will then hope to make money on renewal commission. usually 0.5 per cent. The renewal commission comes out of the annual management charge on the Pep, which is usually in the order of

However, over the last few weeks, price competition has some of the deals offered by the discount houses are effectively "loss leaders".

One particular broker, the Pep Shop, based in Nottingham, is offering a 4 per cent discount on some products. The broker itself pays the extra 1 per cent, which it hopes to recoup from two-years' worth of renewal commission. The Pep Shop gives those who take up its services generic advice about which type of Pep to take out. Haydn Green, Pep Shop managing director, said: "We find out whether, for invest for growth ur for income," He said investors would then be advised about the types of products which would be suitable. Mr Green said "Most of our clients are in the over-45 age group. These people may be building society refugees, or those moving capital out of fixed interest stock, directly into equities." Mr Green believes discount houses will grow in number. and could end up representing around 50 per cent of all Pep business transacted.

The Pep Shop will give a 4 per cent discount on Perpetual Peps, a 4.5 per cent discount on Jupiter Peps and a 0.75 per cent discount on Fidelity's corporate bond Pep. Next year it is planning to offer "welcome payments", for people transferring their Peps from other brokers.

(helsea Financial Services is one of the biggest and longest established discount houses in the country. It claims that investors are taking out Peps with it at a rate of 1,000 a week. John Holder. Chelsea managing director, says it started the discount battle more than ten years ago. Chelsea, for instance, will offer a discount of up to S per cent on Perpetual's Peps. The discount will comprise of 3 per cent rebated commission plus another 2 per cent from Per-petual itself.

Pep-Direct is the latest entrant into the market. It offers an execution-telephone service, which costs a flat fee of £25 per Pep. The company, which is part of independent financial adviser Torquit Clark, was launched on February 17. It has already sold around 1,400 Peps.

Caroline Merrell looks at the options and notes some of the criticisms of Peps that return your capital · Guarantees available — but at what price?

The word guarantee has a peculiar allure for the public.

For those unused to the ups and downs of the stock market, a guarantee can provide the extra reassurance they need to encourage them to switch money from their building society account.

Many fund management groups are now offering personal equity plans (Peps) which will guarantee to return your capital if they are held for a specified period, usually five or six years. The guarantee does not hold if the product is cashed in earlier.

investors should be aware that these guarantees come at a price. You may be sacrificing some of the gains you could make un the stock market

For example, Sun Alliance is launching a lump-sum Pep which gives investors the option of taking out an insurance policy outside the Pep. Those who take out the policy will be are guaranteed to get back their capital plus the premium they paid for their insurance policy. There is also the potential of some capital growth on the Pep itself.

The premium costs 5 per cent of the investment - £300 on a maximum investment of £6,000. The rest of the money will be invested in corporate bonds which will aim to pay a high tax-free income. The Pep is currently vielding about 7 per cent, although this levef of income is not guaranteed. Sun Alliance expects to take at least £100million in to the Pep. It is extending the offer on the plan until the end of April to allow investors the opportunity of investing both this year's and next year's Pep allowance in to the plan. Keith Luckhoo, marketing services manager, said: "You are sacrificing the interest you would have

um in a building society account. in return for capital protection." He points out that the interest carned today un a building society account would be around the 4 per cent mark. "In effect you are paying £12 a year for the capital protection." He adds:

This product will give peace of mind to the huge number of building society investors who do not want to expose their capital."

The Pep, though, has drawn fire from John Spiers, Best Investment managing director. He has criticised

Overwhelmed by demand

Building Society has suspended processing of applications for Direct Access instant access, 90-day notice postal and high-interest cheque accounts after being overwhelmed by applications.

Earlier this month, the West Bromwich Building Society suspended applications for its Direct Instant telephone and postal instant access account. Neither society can guaraotee that when they resume seoding forms, users of the forms will get the rate currently being offered.

Savers seeking a good variable rate with easy access targeted the societies, consistently top of best-buy tables. The West Bromwich was pay-ing 6 per cent gross on a investment of £2,000 in its instant access

Is this the 'best' so far in the sorry tale of friendly society policy maturity value?

From Mr B.E. Danton Sir. Further to the correspondence from Mr Brabbin and Mr Bryant concerning the maturity value of friendly society policies, (Weekend Money Letters, Why we need to champion the small investor against friendly societies. March 2, and Friendly rivalry in maturity, March 16) I think I can claim the "best" so

I am ashamed to admit, to my dismay, that I have a second policy with the comparty due to mature in October

I am open to any advice as to Whether I should ditch the policy now (I expect it would be virtually worthless to cash it in) and put the payments to more fruitful purposes, or continue with the policy and make the best of a poor myestment.

Cut-price PEPs could make you a small fortune. But who wants a small one?

You're going to wish you'd read this ten vears ago.

You might have had £27,700 by now. Roughly speaking, that's the return £6,000 would have made you if our award-winning UK Growth Trust had been available as a PEP since 1986.

We have to admit, of course, that past performance isn't necessarily a guide to the future.

Think how you'd feel, though, if you'd invested the same sum into one of the cut-price funds which, say, only tracked the Stock Market's leading 100 shares.

Because then you'd be down £7,500 since it would have yielded just £20,200. More than 35% short of the 362% return from the Eagle Star fund.

Which we feel comfortably justifies our charging a little more for an Eagle Star PEP.

Because after all, a cut-price PEP would have set you back a good deal more.

If you'd like us to send you an information pack about Eagle Star's PEP, call 0500 600 560 between 8am and 8pm on weekdays or 9am and 2pm on Saturdays.

The value of the PEP, including reinvested income, can fluctuate and is not guaranteed. Past performance and the performance award from Micropal are based on offer to bid prices for the ten-year period ending 1.1.96. Over 5 years, a £6,000 investment in the Eagle Star PEP would have grown to £12.152. These figures have been prepared as if the current PEP rutes applied on 1.1.86. An annual management charge of 1% has been applied to the FTSE Total Return Index. Past performance is not a guide to the future Tax law is subject to changes that cannot be to respect. ## Lenders seek talks with Union Finance clients enders are orging bor-rowers who tried to free themselves from oegative equity by taking advice from Union Finance to make contact and negotiate a settlement. They promise they will be sympathetic to borrowers who talk to them and warn those who fail to come forward that they can expect to face court action to recover

Unioo Finance, the controversial debt counselling service, went into liquidation at the beginning of the month. leaving thousands of borrowers tens of thousands of pounds in debt.

Many have contacted The Times, saying they have no means of repaying the money. But they are afraid to contact their lenders in case they are pursued for huge debts through the courts. Many are also angry that their lenders proved unhelpful when told of negative equity problems in the beginning. This pushed them into the arms of Union

Borrowers who have handed in their keys and forced lenders to sell at a loss are still liable for the difference, which continues to accrue interest until repaid. Legal fees and other costs are also added.

The Council of Mortgage Lenders (CML) said: "Of course we want people to talk to us and see if an arrangement can be made to repay some or all of the shortfall. Surely it's better to try and reach a deal rather than waiting for a possibly enormous demand

Individual lenders agreed. The Halifax, Woolwich and Alliance & Leicester, all of which have borrowers who contacted The Times, urged people to come forward. The Woolwich said: "We take a pragmatic approach. We want to recover the debt but if they haven't got the means we will reach a sensible settlement." time great heroines of this column: Tonya Harding, the black witch of ice skating. After the Harding business - in which her Sindy-doll rival, Nancy Kerrigan, was whacked in the leg with an iron bar - ice skating has soared to unprecedented popularity. Oksana Bayul, for example, now earns $3 million (about £1.9 million) a pean nation and perhaps take team bronze medals but this will only happen if their top six run to their best form.

Joanne Morley and Janet Soulsby, two of the more experienced professionals competing in the Rochampton Gold Cup, will share the handsome trophy for the coming year. Few competitors coped with the afternoon rain as well as they did yesterday: their lotals of 147. one over par, were sufficient for them to be joint winners with Kim Hurley, above, the Coine Valley professional, a shot further back (John Hopkins

The Gold Cup is a pleasing hark back to a bygone era. Thirty-six hole competitiums held on grey days in early spring are not much in vogue. Nor are events that are not decided on a count-back after a lie between two or more players but shared, as this one is. The last time there was a tie was in 1989.

Morley has played in this event more times than she can remember, though she had never won it. Though it took her time to gel going - her morning round of 76 was six strokes behind that of Hurley - she was sharper after lunch, particularly with her putter.

In her 71, two under par. Morley had at least six single putts, ramming in one of 30 feet on the last to set a targel of 147. Nicola Moult, Susan Hodge, Susan Moon and Caroline Hall, professionals all, failed to match this total and it was left to Soulsby to come in with a 73 and prevent Morley from taking the trophy home to the North of England.

Riley makes rivals listen to reason

FROM MEL WEBB IN LISBON

FROM the toes of his shoes to the top of lus head, Wayne Riley exudes all the breezy confidence of the archetypal Australian. He is a bold and bouncy fellow, who in his time has roistered around the golf courses of Europe and beyond. These days, though, he says he is a different man, a more professional player, and yesterday he produced an example of his changed persona as he look a healthy lead at the halfway point of the Portuguese Open.

The greens this week have been the downfall of the Aroeira course, an otherwise charming, tree-lined layout south of Lisbon, and time was when Riley, who in his youth was something of a loose cannon, would have expressed opinions oo them that would have been, to say the least, colourful. No more; part of his growing up has been to take the more measured view, the reasoned approach.

Thus it was that, after the first day, he confined himself to remarking that the greens. which have been made horribly soft and uneven by the vast amount of rain in this part of Portugal in the past three months, looked like they had had the Grand National run over them. From some of his peers, it would have been mildly sensational. From Riley, it was sensationally mild.

preserve his score. His round contained two bogeys and six birdies, three of which were achieved with putts of more than ten feet, and he was very obviously a relieved man to be in the clubhouse with a challenging score against his name,

No, he said, he was not surprised to be on ten-under going into the weekend; if the greens had been in good order he would have expected a score of well into the twenties by the end.

Then somebody told him that David Feherty thought that eighl under par would win the tournament. "Yes, well, he's an Irishman," Riley said. "He talks a lot of old cobblers." Riley and Feherty are good friends — and Feherry, who likes nothing more than the odd spot of verbal jousting, would have led the laughter had he been present.

Davies in search of sure touch with switch of putter

FROM PATRICIA DAVIES

LAURA DAVIES, the defending champion, was playing interesting golf in the second round of the Standard Register Ping event at Moon Valley yesterday.
Only three shots behind the leaders, Barb Mucha and Marianne Morris, after a first round 71, two under par, that included a bogey five at the 17th after a two-iron out of bounds off the Ice. Davies started at the 10th. It is a par five that she has reached with two good blows in the past, but the world No I's drive sailed away to the lelt, into a grass gully not far from the out-of-bounds posts, and she had to settle for a par.

Davies collected a par at the next, a short hole, drove well right at the 12th - another par - and left again at the 13th, a 450-yard par five she had cleared in two on Thursday, with a three-iron.

Yesierday, her drive soared left, hit a big eucalyptus tree, bounced against a garden wall and came to rest, in bounds, perfectly playable. Davies played up just short of the green, pitched beautifully to three leet - and missed the

On Thursday, she had used the new Ping "Danser", a puner with a maller-shaped head, but yesterday she was using a more conventional Ping putter, still seeking that magic touch on the greens.

At the 14th, Davies eventually got her driver — a Maruman with a black titanium head called the "Laura Special" - working and hit the ball miles down the middle. Il yielded another par but she dropped a shot at the 15th, another par four, to slip to one under par. Ahead of Davies, Trish Johnson, a Solheim Cup teammate, was three under par after birdies at the 11th, 13th and 16th had offset a bogey — three putts — at the 12th. Johnson, out last on Thursday, shot 72_

Such a delusion is slowly being eroded, and sport is increasingly seen as an important matter in cultural history. The younger the country, the greater the importance. # Fame Again can star in Lincoln

By RICHARD EVANS, RACING JOURNALIST OF THE YEAR

FAME AGAIN, backed from 25-1 to 12-1 with the sponsors yesterday, can land the gamble in the William Hill Lincoln Handicap at Doncaster this afternoon.

Lynda Ramsden took the first big handicap of the season with High Premium three years ago and is particularly adept at scoring with older horses first time out - as she confirmed with a 22 per cent strike-rate last season.

In a race where the winner's starting price during the past decade has averaged more than 22-1, surprises have been commonplace, but the form book and the trends of the Lincoln highlight the prospects of the daughter of Then

Festival Handicap and reopposes on 91b better terms. Significantly, Fame Again has run seven of her 19 races at Doncaster and showed her liking for the course by finishing in the frame on five occasions. During the past ten years the Lincoln has been won by horses in a narrow rating band - 75 to 84 - with all carrying 8st 8lb or less and she qualifies on both counts. With the rain having produced perfect underfoot conditions, she also appears well drawn in stall nine as the pace in the race looks set to come from horses drawn towards the far side of the straight mile. The first four home in yesterday's Lincoln "dress rehearsal", the William Hill Spring Mile, were drawn 2, 1, 7 and 3.

Jack Ramsden, husband of the trainer, said yesterday: "Fame Again will like this ground, but there is a doubt about her getting the mile. Although she won over the distance as a two-year-old, last year there were a few times when she appeared not to get the trip."

However, the informative statistical review produced for not be far away from stall the first time by Timeform seven on his favourite track.

Mark Tompkins, the Newmarket trainer, saddled his first winner for four months when 20-1 chance Cool Edge won the £20,000-added William Hill Spring Handicap at Doncaster yesterday. Racing on the far side, Cool Edge quickened to the front approaching the final furlong to beat Lynton Lad by 14 lengths, with Dances With Hooves a further length back in third. If the ground remains soft, Cool Edge could return to action in the Spring Cup at Newbury next month.

Supreme Lady to progress again

1.00: Turning Trix was badly hampered in the Fulke Walwyn Kim Muir Chase at Cheltenham and that run is best forgotten. Previously. David Nicholson's progressive chaser ran well here behind Terao and he is worth another chance. Do Be Brief bounced back to form here 18 days ago when defeating Philip's Woody and will appreciate the ground conditions, but Suny-Bay is the most progressive horse in the field. An impressive winner at Towcester, he was going well at Sandown Il weeks ago when slipping on a bend and fracturing his jaw. Provided Charlie Brooks's chaser is fully recovered, he should go close, 1.30: Frogmarch has impressed when winning oovice events at Newbury and Windsor but looks to have his fair share of weight against experienced handicappers. Star Market thrives on his racing and after running with credit at Cheltenham bolted in at Hereford three days later. But his best form is on right-handed tracks. Teinein bounced back to form when shortheaded by Divertimiento at Chepstow and is the one they all have to beat.

2.00: Henrietta Knight nominated this race for Supreme Lady in early January after her well-bred mare ff the ma at Leicester. The five-yearold subsequently showed even better form when winning at Fontwell and there is every reason to believe she can progress again now that she tackles a distance of ground. Goldenswift is twice a winner over this distance on softish ground. Along with Miss Optimist, she

3.00: Projection, winner of a 21-runner maiden at Newmarket last autumn, is well regarded by Barry Hills and will be a hot favourite. However, ground conditions here are very different and with two Hills-trained favourites having flopped this week, Mironov is a value alternative. The son of Marju won his only start in Italy on softish ground and has pleased Mick Channon during the winter.

3.40: See above. 4.15: An early season puzzler made even more complicated by the soft-ground loving Right Win returning to the Flat after running poorly in the Champion Hurdle. Rainbow Top makes his turf debut after easily winning two all-weather races, but in a contest with limited betting appeal Daraydan could oblige. Winner of a listed rated stakes at Newmarket last October, he has wintered well and should relish

COLDSTREAM, the Godolphin-trained 2,000 Guineas hope, is to miss the race after fracturing his near-hind leg (Julian Muscat writes). Simon Crisford, of Godolphin, said: "The injury is obviously disappointing but we are optimissic that Coldstream will return to the track in due course.

BOWLS is a young man's game these days, but William Walker Wood, MBE, bucks the trend. At 57, he is the oldest man left in the world outdoor championships here and yesterday he rolled back the years to help Scotland into the final of the triples.

Playing as well as ever, Wood was the pivot, effectively controlling the action from his position between the lead, Kenny Logan, and the skip, George Adrain, as Scotland defeated South Africa 23-11. The Scots will play the New Zealand trio of Andrew Curtain David File and Peter Belliss in the final tomorrow. in the pairs semi-finals today. Australia nicet Scotland and freland take on Wales. A count of five on the twelfth end broke an 8-8 deadlock and gave Cameron Curis and Rex Johnston, the Commonwealth champions, a 13-8 lead over the high-prufile England pair. Tony Allcock and Andy Thomson. The Australians mopped up, winning 24-11 and ending the prospect of a United Kingdom monopoly in the

The semi-final between Australia and the champions. Richard Corsie and Alex Marshall, of Scotland, both unbeaten, should be a fascinating encounter, Will Thomas and Robert Weale, of Vales, and Jeremy Henry and Sammy Allen, of Ireland, survived surprise defeats in the final round-robin session.

Henry. 21, is one of the youngest competitors in the event while Allen, his skip, is only three months younger than Wood. They almost threw their chances away when they lost to Kenya, but collected seven shots over the last three ends to tie with New Zealand at the top of the section B pairs table.

Level on points and on shots, they got through because they had beaten New Zealand in the match between the two top teams yesterday. Wales went through despite losing 24-19 to Jersey.

Bath in sight of Twickenham again

Hill prepares for happy return with Gloucester

By David Hands, RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

WHEN this season began, Richard Hill was the chair-Today, he will walk into the Recreation Ground as director of rugby for Gloucester, whose unenviable task it is to hall Bath's headlong rush into yet another Pilkington Cup final.

The story of Hill's abrupt departure from Bath, the club he served for a decade as a player, is history now. There was not room for him and Juhn Hall and perhaps English rugby was the beneficiary. in that two such intense per-sonalities now divide their talents between two clubs, rather than pool them for the benefit of only one. Certainly Gloucester, despite their lowly league position, have been transformed under Hill's guidance.

Six months ago, they were a club in shock. Their nadir came at Orrell early in October, when their play was so bad that Hill and his coaching colleagues. Peter Kingston, John Fidler and Viv Woolley. were reduced to white-faced silence, "When I analysed that game I found we gave away possession 36 times," Hill said. "I went to Gloucester with plenty of strategies but there was no game on which you could build them." Gradually, the players developed the ability to string phases of play together, only for Hill to discover that they lacked the fitness to sustain the effort for 80 minutes. The players have knuckled down and I have seen significant improvements," the former England scrum half said. "I can see the form of clubs like Saracens, Orrell and Bristol dropping off and ours improving. Whether that will be enough to keep us in the first division, I don't know, but the tangible reward. "It has kept our season alive, it gives a buzz at training and the nice thing about the semi-final is the excitement among the players. They feel good, they know they are playing well and they can't wait. I have to be realistic. playing Buth is a massive task, This game is about 18 months

Compared with Bath's swath of internationals, il may not seem much, but there is a hunger about Gloucester which was not spirit in the club is fantastic and the cup has brought a tangible reward.

Bath, Hill said. "I'll feel very proud walking in with these players from Gloucester. As a player, I was passionate about everything to do with Bath but until you become involved with another club, you don't realise how that passion can develop in another way. 111 enjoy the day and so will they."

If Bath, playing at hume in a semi-final for the first time, are favoured to reach their tenth final in 13 years. Leicester seem even greater certainties to win the other semi-final, at Sunbury. against London Irish, from the second division. On a yielding surface, the Leicester for-wards will surely deny the fluent Irish backs — directed for the first time in a competitive game by David Hum-phreys, the Ireland stand-off half - the ball they need to play a wide game.

Clive Woodward, the former Leicester centre now coaching the Exiles, makes no secret of his primary ambition, promotion. Even so, 6,750 people will cram into Sunbury — not a ticket is to be had for love or money — to see the men in green try to win against the odds in a match that brings the country's two leading points-scorers. John Liley and Michael Corcoran. face to face.

Cornwall may have no say in the county championship final this season but they may yet have a day out at Twickenham if Helston win their semifinal of the Pilkington Shield. against Wellingborough Old Grammarians at the Bridg-water ground. In the other semi-final, at Wakefield, Medicals meet Old Centralians, neither having conceded more than one try in seven shield matches. They should be equally matched.

Davies returns on cup mission

THE alliance of Llanelli brain and Cardiff brawn - if that is not too great a generalisation - finally earned Wales an overdue success in the five nations' championship last weekend (David Hands writes). Today the two clubs are rivals at Stradey Park in the quarter-finals of the Swalec Cup, a match which gives Jonathan Davies his greatest examination since his

by league. Once, Davies was lauded by the Stradey terraces. Now he plays for Cardiff at stand-off half, the position denied him return last autumn from rug-

most of this season by the form of Adrian Davies; but the younger Davies is struggling with a thigh mjury that he has carried since November and faces the possibility of an operation, so Jonathan must help Cardiff justify their tag as cup favourites.

To confuse matters further, another member of the clan, Phil Davies, will be doing his best to deny Cardiff. He has played in seven cup finals for Llanelli and this is due to be his last season with them before joining Leeds as their director of rugby in June - er a package that will keep him in Wales. But the most dangerous side in Wales at the moment are

Neath, who should dispose of Dunvant at The Gnoll. The cup romannes will hope for a good display by Caerphilly, the second division club, who play Newport. Swansea, last year's cup winners, must concentrate on making up ground in the Heineken League by beating Bridgend, while, tomorrow, the next generation will be on show at St Helen's in the colts international between Wales

Inaugural games at national stadium

By Sydney Friskin

THE inaugural matches will be held at hockey's National Stadium in Millon Keynes tomorrow, when England's men will play India and the women meet France.

The final scramble for places in the Great Britain squad for the Olympics in Atlanta now begins in earnest, with the younger men, Pearn, Hall and Hoskin, staking their claims. Hall and Hoskin were at the Olympic qualifying tournament two months ago in Barcelona and Pearn at the Champions' Trophy tour-nament last September in Berlin, where he set up the chance for Hall to score the equalising goal in a 1-1 draw againsi Australia.

Soma Singh, a fate replace-ment for the injured Hazlitt, will probably fill in at left half and McGuire, now fully recovered from his back injury. returns at full back.

India retaining 14 of their squad from Barcelona, will probably build their anacks around the brilliance of Dhanraj Pillay at centre forward and Mukesh Kumar, the outside right.

The Royal Air Force defeated the Army 2-0 at Aldershot yesterday but the margin of victory was not enough for them to retain the Services title, which went back into the hands of the Army on goal difference. Cartmell, from a short corner, and Powell scored the goals for the RAF in the first half.

There is no play in the men's national league today but everyone in the England women's squad, including the coach and the manager, must play a national league game. with five of them involved in the toughest match in the premier division as Ipswich take on Slough.

Ipswich can take nothing for granted and must win to keep in touch with Hightown at the top of the table. Hightown take on Bracknell, the relegation favourites, and, for them, three points appear

Three rides at the Duke Of Buccleuch's fixture today could offer some consolation for Parker, who has winning

Smith record books ticket to Olympics

By Craig Lord

GRAEME SMITH, who cele-silver medal at the world brates his twentieth birthday next week, yesterday became the first Briton to break the eight-minute barrier for 800 metres freestyle on his way to a British record in the 1,500 metres and a place in the Great Britain team for the Olympic Games in Atlanta.

His times, of 7min 59.48sec at 800 metres and 15min 03.43sec at the full distance, are the fastest in the world this year and a tribute to Dave Calleja, the Stockport coach. Both men are aware, however. that the British Olympic trials at Ponds Forge in Sheffield. which end tomorrow, are only the second national trials, behind the United States, among leading swimming naoons. The crucial times will come from Australia and Germany next month. For now, Smith can enjoy a few weeks in the sun after defeating in devastating fashion Paul Palmer, 21, and tan Wilson, 25, the man whose records he broke. Palmer, with t5min 18.60sec, will compete alongside Smith in Atlanta. but Wilson fell foul not only of the two-per-event limit, but the qualifying standard. His 15min 32.95sec showed he was was far from the form that saw him win a silver medal at the European championships in 1991 before suffering chronic fatigue syndrome in 1993. Wilson recovered to take the short-course championships in December. However, the pace proved too much yesterday as Smith set out as he intended to continue, never surrendering the lead and always inside record pace. "I thought I'd have to get out fast and set a British record, get under 15 minutes, just to make the team." Smith said. Only six swimmers had broken that barrier. Smith may have to do that to win a medal at Atlanta. While Palmer revealed as one of the secrets of his success a metronomic speed-setting device that he conceals under his cap in training. Smith. born in Falkirk and raised in Stockport, said "hard work" explained his pace. He also revealed that he takes creotine, a substance that increases muscle mass -"I've put a stone on in the past year," said a lean Smith - and he eats three times as much as the national average daily intake to help him swim mnre than 80km in training each week. Neither Mark Foster nor Sarah Hardcastle were overly happy with their performances yesterday, though both qualified comfortably in events for which they will be outside medal hopes in Atlanta, respectively the 50m (22.74sec) and 800m freestyle (8min 38.27sec).

Saturday portrait: Gary McAllister, by Kevin McCarra

Smooth operator who brings refinement to club and country

McAllister, the captain of Leeds United and his country, returns to Scotland for an international match, the boyhood friends who ring up for tickets often refer to him as "wee man". The term hurls the six-footer back to his runty teenage years, before fulltime training stretched his frame.

The story of McAllister, who will direct Leeds's performance in the Coca-Cola Cup final against Aston Villa tomorrow, has been all about growth. "Gary will retire satisfied." Gordon Strachan, his predecessor as captain at Elland Road. said, "because he'll know he has got as much out of himself as he possibly could. He's never been happy to stay just as he is."

That striving is concealed by McAllister's style. Despite possessing the modern virtues of stamina and diligence, which can see him hurry an opponent into error, McAllister still looks like a throwback to an era when the game prized elegance. Head up and straight-backed, he may loft a precise long ball or clip the through-pass an instant before the gap in a defence closes.

His talent, though, initially went unpestered and there were no scouts badgering for his signature as a boy. The Scotland youth caps went to others, who would mostly fail in football, while McAllister came closer to international recognition, in those years, as a golfer, All the same, there was some smoothness in the process that took a Lanarkshire lad onto the books of the local club,

There, McAllister's height grew before his strength did and it teenagers permanently in need of a wall to lean on. Soon enough, however, he was helping to prop up Motherwell, for there are always line job prospects at a struggling club. Others could see that he did not belong in the midst of such toil. His manager at Motherwell, Tommy McLean, flinches at the very idea of praise, yet McAllister drew from him, in 1985, a eulogy that made comparisons, in potential, with Graeme Souness. The oing home is an exercise parallels seem shaky now, particular to miscalculate his in time travel. When Gary larly since the Leeds captain has own value. When the moment never shown the calibrated aggression of the Liverpool man, but some elements of the analogy still > Like Souriess, there is a self-sufficiency about McAllister. "He likes to be one of the boys, and yet he's not one of the boys." Craig Brown, the Scotland manager, said of his captain. Perhaps it is the slight distance from the rest of the group that makes others follow him. He led his country for the first time in 1993, with Brown's faith in him so emphatic that a celebrated home-based player. Paul McStay, of Celtic, had the job taken from him.

Independence and its responsi-bilities were inherited early by McAllister. His mother died when he was eight and, with his father at work, taking care of the house and looking after his younger brother, Craig, became routine duties. The habit of coping was established and a move to Leicester City in 1985, for £150,000, carried no risk of homesickness. McAllister, at 20, was ready to pursue his trade and the surroundings were incidental.

'You can imagine him having a mobile phone with him when he is on the pitch'

Filbert Street, however, proved a fortunate destination, particularly once David Pleat became manager there and improved McAllister's understanding of the where and when of midfield play. Footballers are famous for fending off advice, but he is greedy for knowledge.
"Gary is even better now than he was when Leeds won the title in 1992. Strachan said, because he has the capacity to keep on taking in more information about the game. He'll jump at any opportunity to learn and we even used to go and watch the youth matches

McAllister was then troubled by Clough's behaviour when the manager began to harangue a waiter who was making too much noise in gathering some spoons onto a tray. The following day, the transfer to the City Ground was declined. In this case, one can only conclude, player had interviewed manager and rejected his seemed to peeve both men. In his own account, McAllister says he was given a lengthy inventory of his fallings as a player, although these were graciously to be over-looked, since he could at least pass the ball. footballers to exercise power, and probably unprecedented for a man, at 25, to reject the invitation finally to join a leading club. It is such self-possession that leads Brown to view McAllister as a young executive: "You can imagine him having a mobile phone with him on the pitch."

In 1990, he answered Howard Wilkinson's call, agreeing to move to Elland Road in a £1 million deal. There, at least, an accord with the manager was easily reached and. two years later, Leeds won the old first division title, edging past Manchester United in the final days of the season. The principal strength of the team lay in midfield, where McAllister worked with Strachan, David Batty and the then-precocious Gary Speed.

For McAllister, at least, progress at Elland Road has been fairly steady, and he went on to take over the captaincy from Strachan. It is not a titular position. "There is more involved in that job at Leeds than at other clubs," Strachan said. "Howard allows you a little closer to him and you act as a go-between. Whether you're relaying some problem a player has or organising a rota for hospital visits, it's a full-time job."

McAllister appears at ease with his many roles. The thinning hair and those features marked by thoughtfulness only add to the impression of maturity. On occasions when events slip beyond his control, the effect is, in his case, particularly outlandish. His chagrin at breaking an arm on the eve of his marriage, to Denise, in 1993 and sporting a plaster cast at the wedding was considerable.

Little else has gone wrong for McAllister. The gradual development of his career brought him to prominence a little too late to permit the move to Italian football he would love to have made. His measured progress in football, however, seems to imply longevity and his contract with Leeds lasts until 1999. The club is thought to have brushed aside inquiries for him from Rangers and, this season, Arsenal.

The content of his future at Elland Road, however, is particularly hard to discern. Since the title was won in 1992, English football has changed, but Leeds have not. Or, at least, not sufficiently, Before the FA Cup quarter-final replay against Liverpool at Anfield on Wednesday, Wilkinson said he did not want to see his side congratulated for attractive play in a defeat. Leeds lost 3-0 anyway, and received no praise at all. The problem with their utilitarian style is that it is not utilitarian at all. It does not work these days. If the club, no matter the result tomorrow, is to evolve, however, McAllister's refined presence will be crucial. On meeting him in 1990, Clough looked at the player's cowboy boots and asked if he was related to long Wayne Well show related to John Wayne. Well, there is no holster and no drawl, but McAllister, too, can champion a gold medal

FOR Todd Eldredge, of the United States, it was an evening of triumph and euphoria. for Steven Cousins, of Britain, a nightmare experience which will stay with him for a long time.

Eldredge wan the free skaling section of the ice skating world ehampionships and with it the gold medal. Cousins, disaster following upon disaster until his presence un the ice was nothing short of an embarrassment plunged to eighteenth place in the final and to fifteenth place overall, after having secured fifth place in the short programme on Wednesday,

"Steven's in a state of shock," Doug Leigh, his Ca-nadian coach, said, "and I'd appreciate it if you'd give him some space." (Not that we had any intention of intruding upon privale grief.)

Calamity came early. Cousins fell heavily on his opening jump, a triple axel. That could happen to anynne, but after a triple salchow, there followed a double lutz rather than a triple, a fall on the triple flip. not even a double axel, only a double loop ... but why go on? There was a second triple towards the end, but by then eyes were on the clock, willing it round to 4min 30sec.

Leigh could not explain what had gone wrong. "I wish I had a crystal ball," he said. "Steven can normally do that programme in his sleep, but something just shut down."

By contrast, the Britain No 2, Neil Wilson, at 17 six years Cousins's junior. opened the evening with a programme of elegant lines. clean edges, stunning spins and four triple jumps, all perfectly attuned to the music of Chopin and Meyerbeer.

Cousins's failure means that Britain will be allowed only one entry next year, so there are the makings of a fascinating confrontation between the two at the British championships next season.

success over Ilia Kulik, the overnight leader, to his superior jumping skills, for he is not the ice presence of the Is vear-old Russian.

Otherwise, the evening belonged to the local hero. Elvis Stojko, winner of the title in another member of Leigh's stable. A fall had left him in seventh place after the short programme and with little hope of any sort of medal.

In the final, though, he had 17.000 spectators in the Edmonton Coliseum in ecstasy with a performance which lifted him into fourth place.

season. Is Savo Milosevic, the Asion Villa forward, no more than a costly mistake? A £3.5 million summer signing, from Partizan Belgrade, who could not hit a barn door at ten paces. Or is the amiable Serb seriling in steadily and promising riches for the future? All left foot, perhaps, but plenty of scope for refinement and improvement. At Wembley tomorrow, when Vil-la take on Leeds United in the Coca-Cola Cup final, he will attempt to silence his most voluble critics. Those who mock his hunched, lumbering style: those who jeer when his oft lin, 13st 4lb frame tumbles too frequently in the opposirion penalty area; and those who wonder why he appears to be loathing every minute of "The young man obviously has ability," Brian Clough said, when questioned about Milosevic's initial impact in England, "You only have to look at some of the neat things he does to realise that." Praise indeed. Old Big Ead can be the most scathing of judges.

Typically, though, the sting is not far away. "He doesn't give the impression of someone who is playing with

Smith gets chance to measure Bradford's rebuilding BY CHRISTOPHER IRVINE

SOME things at Odsal stay the same. In the bowels of the natural amphitheatre, two osts poked out above the fog. Brian Smith cannot alter the vagaries of the Yorkshire cli-mate, but almost everything else at Bradford Bulls rugby league club, including the name, has changed. The Australian has been coach and chief executive for seven months. Wearing both hats, he drew a graph measuring team performance and income growth. The two lines are on steady inclines ahead of today's Silk Cut Challenge Cup semi-final meeting with Leeds at Huddersfield. Bradford Northern stood for stolid, unchanging values.

its transformation to Bulls was initially damned. A new face and a fresh team is altering attitudes. A Wembley date with St Helens on April 27 would put the reconstruc-tion well ahead of schedule. "We've had a charmed run to the semis, unlike Leeds, and no one is more surprised to find ourselves in this position than me," Smith said. "In terms of overall readiness, perhaps we aren't ready, but we're here, and although I find it a scary concept, try telling that to the players."

Smith, 42, would not rate defeat by Leeds as a significant setback, as the changes more than 30 players have come and gone — are directed towards Super League start-ing next week. The cup run has been a boous for a young side still getting acquainted. Robbie Paul, 20, the club

captain and brother of Wigan's Henry, is one of the few pre-Smith players left at Odsal. "Bradford's idea of a youth policy was to sign someone of 24, II was an aged side but the sale of Paul Newlove ito St Helens enabled us to change that and build strength in depth. That deal also got us fine players in Nickle, Loughlin and Dwyer, and a piggy-bank to fund four more deals and two more in the pipeline," Smith said. Leeds, loo, are a young side, but half of them have Wembley experience, and logic dictates they should win. Bul if Bradford can cause an upset, the pointers on Smith's graph will surely take off.

The Australian Rugby League won a lemporary (1 junction yesterday to stop 311 rebel players signing up to a proposed Global League. The restraint order also applies to Maurice Lindsay, chief executive of the Rugby Football League, who announced the competition would start next week. A full hearing will take place in Sydney on Monday.

FOOTBALL CORRESPONDENT

THE Coca-Cola Cup might not be the real thing but so long as nobody tells Tony Yeboah or Dwight Yorke, there is the mouthwatering prospect of some memorable moments when Leeds United meet Aston Villa in the final at Wembley tomorrow

Yeboah, out of Africa, and Yorke, from the Caribbean, are representatives of the foreign legion, imports who this winter have finally put an end to the nonsense that English football is so fast and so committed that overseas players could never cope with it.

Cope? They lift it, separate it from the norm, transcend the safety-first aspects and the physical aggression of the cul-de-sac down which so many English teams have been led. Yeboah has a hunger, a quite awesome physical and acrobade approach to goalscoring, that even if this is the only full season we get out of him, we will remember him. Yorke has grown on English minds more slowly, has come to bewitch us with a style every bit as open as his Tobagan smile, and at last to release flair of his own that, 22 times so far this season, defences have not been able to plot against.

They are, of course, individuals in a team game, but why would anyone want to bring them to this country to try to make them scuffle, as so many home-bred players all too readily do? The sight, recently, in two wretchedly barren games, of Leeds being so fearful of Liverpool that they tried simply to negate them.

was terrible. Yeboah, instead of lurking, waiting for his phenomenal match-winning moments, was seen scurrying around the pitch, sometimes almost in the wasted but wasteful because he simply has not the education to tackle properly. And yet, throw him up in the air at the other end of the field. watch him raise his body horizontal to the ground and lift either foot to score over his own head, and you have the quintessential athlete towards which a multimillion-pound game should aspire. He is outscored, so far this season, by Yorke simply because Yeboah, who now has exactly 100 goals in 176 ap-pearances for Eintracht Frankfurt and Leeds, was absent for eight matches, on duty with Ghana in the African Narions Cup. Leeds won iust once in those eight matches, such is his talismanic presence among them. Of course there is much that goes into teamwork behind them. In midfield there is the battle of wiles between Andy Townsend and Gary

McAllister. There is the stealth and bravery of Gary Speed. who is back barely one month after fracturing his cheekbone. And, in the three-man defences which these teams are both likely to deploy, Gareth Southgate has apparently won his fitness battle and will play two weeks after damaging ankle ligaments. Alongside him, Paul McGrath, a graduate of the hard school of football apprendeships, loses nothing in application or footballing intelligence to Leeds's David Wetherall, who is an honours graduate in chemistry. Finally, behind all of them, stand Mark Bosnich and John Lukic, men with among the safest hands in the goalkeeping profession.

And yet, one comes again and again in analysis to the almost hypnooc parts that Yeboah and Yorke might conjure up. They have big sup-porting players — for Leeds Brian Deane, and for Villa Savo Milosevic - men who, if only they can believe in their talents, would surely be greater names in our game.

Perhaps Deane, a student of the foreign game, sums it up best: "He [Yeboah] is different to anyone I've ever played with. If you watch his close control and technique, it's definitely of a different and then you start off as a manager wanting to take a team to a cup final," Wilkinson enthused. Please, Howard, let that enthusiasm rise in your soul this weekend.

He must remember his own roots when, as a miner's son in South Yorkshire, he fell in love with football the day he joined a group around a nine-inch television set owned by one of the neighbours and was be-witched by Stanley Matthews in the 1953 FA Cup Final. Wilkinson has, if he dares to use them, a couple of wingers up his sleeve.

He does not wholly seem to trust Rod Wallace and, if not, then he has the developing talent of Andy Gray, 18. But. then again. Wilkinson has also to try to trust Tomas Brolin, a half-fit Swede for whom he paid a reported £4.5 million and who, at best, is likely to rise off the substitutes' bench to add his talent to the Leeds effort. It is intriguing, a final between equals, where the managers throw of a dice, the daring to send on a quality player, could be both decisive and beautiful.

Illingworth to carry on as Graveney bows to pressure

NOT for the first time this year, English cricket exposed itself to the highest farce yesterday, although this time the Carry On capers were entirely off the field. Only 24 hours after being formally confirmed as a candidate for the position of chairman of selectors. David Graveney bowed to pressure from the Cricketers' Association, the players' union of which he is general secretary, and withdrew his nomination.

Graveney entered the elecoon against Raymond Illingworth, who has been chair-man since 1994, with assur-ances that there would not be a conflict of interest over him taking on the two roles, but that was not the opinion of some coundes, nor, more important, of the association's executive, in the form of Tim Curtis and Jack Bannister. respectively chairman and president.

They anticipated insur-mountable difficulties in Graveney acting as servant and master to the players, and dealing with the media on two fronts. They also doubted whether there would be time for him to perform both jobs

The executive presented him with an ultimatum to chose between the jobs. After lengthy telephone calls across the Atlantic, Graveney, who is holidaying in Florida, opted to continue his full-time job with the association, although with obvious reluctance, and without conceding that he shared the executive's views.

"As a paid employee of the Cricketers' Association, I accept the instruction of the president and the chairman." a statement from Graveney read. "I would like to take this opportunity of thanking Warwickshire and Surrey for nominating me and to any other counties who might have supported me. "I apologise for any distress this decision may have caused to them or any other party. It has always been my wish to serve the game to the best of my ability and I shall continue to do this in the future."

Graveney became the Cricketers' Association's first fulltime employee in 1994, and an England selector last year. His dual commitments had caused concern before, especially when he became involved in the complaints of mistreatment made by Devon Malcolm, a player whom he had a duty to represent, against Illingworth, a fellow selector. The indications were that Graveney would have run Illingworth very close, if not actually beaten him, in the vote, the result of which was to have been announced on Tuesday. Now, with the deadline for nominations having passed, a vote is unnecessary, and Illingworth will remain chairman for a third year, to the immense frustration of bis opponents.

We're devastated that there will not now be an election," Paul Sheldon, the chief execuove of Surrey, said. "We felt David was the right man at the right time. Our philosophy was that a younger generation must now come forward and we support the backing that Mike Gatting and David Gower had given to Graveney. Even in the brief period that he was a candidate, there was a growing base of support for David Graveney and all the indications were that it would be a close vote.

"There will be great dissatisfaction that the status quo is to be preserved. With no election now possible, the coundes are effectively voting for no change in the way the Eng-land team is run and in the state of English cricket. That is

Graveney, who agreed to stand when John Barclay, Illingworth's assistant during the winter, declined invitations from counties to put himself up against the chairman, had proposed in his manifesto a series of radical changes to the way that the England team was run. though there was some doubt as to whether he would be able to implement these immediately had he won.

Much of Illingworth's likely support came from those counties which felt that the status quo ought to be maintained until the results of an ongoing inquiry - chaired by David Acfield - into all aspects of the management of the England team are published later this year.

Having retained one job, Illingworth must now wait until Tuesday to see whether he will hold onto another. The Test and County Cricket Board executive committee will then review England's unhappy winter and Illingworth's posicion as team manager, a post he has said that he wants to relinquish in September come what may.

Curle fined and warned after disrepute hearing

By DAVID MADDOCK

KEITH CURLE, the Manchester City captain, was fined £500 by the Football Association yesterday. and warned as to his future conduct, after admitting his guilt over a disrepute charge brought when he used foul and abusive language against Paul Alcock, the FA Carling Premiership referee. The incident occurred immediately after City's game with Everton in February, which Everion won 2-0.

"I'm glad it's over because it has been very embarrassing." Curle said. "I've never been before the FA on a disrepute charge and yet I'm facing two in a week. I pleaded guilty but asked for my record to be taken into account."

Curle might not be as fortunate with his second appearance at Lancasier Gaie. A date will be set early next week to hear charges brought against him and Faustino Asprilla, the Newcastle United forward, after two incidents involving the pair during a Premiership match last month. "I don't know if I will be pleading guilty." Curle said. "To be honest, t don't fully understand what it is they are

who can score goals."
Fliteroft said: "I'm 23 and I've been fighring relegation for three years. I've seen players I was with in the England under-2ts go on and think I've stood still. Now, I hope, by coming to Blackburn, I

Genoa, the Italian Serie B club, has denied reports that it is the mystery buyer of the 34 per cent shareholding in Norwich City held by Robert Chase, the chairman. Aldo Spinelli, the Genoa president, said: "I had an offer to take over a major quota in Norwich, an investment of £6 million. I know the people, and love the city, but I have declined for the moment."

Chase announced on Thursday that he had agreed to sell his holding, after ten years at the club, but he declined to identify the purchasers. The sale is subject to an independent audit of the Norwich accounts.

Modahl clearance may follow IAAF meeting

DIANE MODAHL may receive full international clearance of a drugs offence in the next three days, as the International Amateur Athletic Federacion (IAAF) council meets in Cape Town tomorrow and Monday with her case on its agenda (David Powell writes). If the IAAF has good news for Modahl, it had none yesterday for the British Athletic Federation (BAF), refusing to offer it financial support towards the defence of a High Court action in which Modahl is suing the BAF for

A source inside the IAAF sug-gested yesterday that Modahl should have grounds for optimism because the council would hardly be studying the case now had its expert advisers on drugs not been impressed by new evidence. Modahl was sent home from the Commonwealth Games 19 months ago after failing a drugs test taken nine weeks earlier. A BAF appeals panel cleared her last July after an earlier BAF hearing had found her

WHY WE WANT TO BE ALONE

by Lynne Truss

or rather obvious reasons, there are or rather obvious reasons, there are no sit-coms set in a single-person household. Tony Hancock did The Bedsitter in the early 1960s, and jolly good it was too, but as a dramatic genre the SPH never really took off. It's the absence of interaction that's the problem. People living on their own may occasionally slap their knees and say aloud "Cup of tea time!" or "Damn, missed The Archers!" but it doesn't make such good domestic drama as doesn't make such good domestic drama as squabbling over who takes out the bins, or establishing which lousy varmint finished off the marmalade without saying.

Anyway, this is my theory, like it or not:

Anyway, this is my theory, like it or not: that because the single household is rarely given the affirmation of the screen role; model, non-singles assume it must be weird or sad or awful, and consequently have no idea what they're missing. In the film Batman Returns, frowzy single-householder Michelle Pfeiffer flings open the door of her lonely flat, kicks off her shoes and yells optimistically "Hi honey, I'm home!" and then slumps against the wall sighing, "Oh I'l forgot, I'm not married". That's the general picture of what it's like, and it's a wicked lie. But now a fine new Marketing Intelligence.

getting younger, richer and happier) has discovered that the single household is a positive place, where people chuck about upbeat words like "freedom" and "achievement". Glad to know it's official at last, and us who can buy things on a whim without involving anybody else. In my experience, people who live alone consult their own wishes, and if this also means they pick their feet and talk for hours on the phone, who cares? They eat home-delivery pizzas without shame, straight from the box. They get lots of undisturbed sleep, and don't waste time arguing about bins or marmalade. They have the remote control in their own hands. Once I installed a catflap all by myself, and the sense; of achievement I experienced was extraordinary: it was better than publishing a novel. P.

shall temper the evangelical tone, but only with difficulty, for once you have achieved happiness in the single state, you hear words like "selfish" and . weird" levelled against you, and have no idea what's meant by it, save envy. It's true . that single people are often excluded from the dinner party circuit, which is hurtful; but it is wrong to assume that hostesses are worried about losing their husbands to the rogue female in the low-cut top and the big lipstick. Single people make couples nervous because they are free spirits, who have kicked away the ladder of dependence. When the marital bickering starts, single people shake their heads and say Ooh-tut-tut-tut. Like Freddie the dolphin, they made an adult decision to spend more time away from their family. "Selfish"

And as for "weird", this accusation is easilyparried. "You'll get weird," your couplesome; friends warn you. "You'll get set in your ways and only buy the one sort of yoghurt, and wear pyjamas all day on Sunday." But when you ask these critics outright, "Do you ever call each other Bunny Wunny in funny voices when you're at home?" they get shifty and snap, "What's that got to do with anything?"
And then you've got them, because there's

VASES AND VOLCANOES Sir William Hamilton has never had a good press, but then when did a complaisant husband or member of an enforced menage d trois? However, as the British Museum's spectacular new spring exhibition vividly demonstrates, history has played Hamilton false by allowing him in primarily as Lady Hamilton's other quarter. He was an influential diplomat and, more importantly, an obsessed collector. Moreover, he was stadoned in Naples for 35 years during the gradual excavation of Pompeii and Herculaneum, so that he was on the spot for some of the most spectacular hauls. Unfortunately, he was so obsessed that he kept bankrupting himself and had to sell most of his collections (notably one of the greatest ever of painted Greek vases). All this is chronicled, with objects and copies of Hamilton's publications. Nor are the decadent Court of Naples and Emma, whom he surely collected as a beautiful object, forgonen. HAREWOOD HOUSE MAS-TERPIECES Edward Viscount Lascelles was one of the great patrons of the early 19th century, collecting art in the first heyday of such great watercolourists as Turner, Thomas Girtin and John Varley, all of whom made numerous paintings and drawings of the house and the estate. Though the collection was largely dispersed after the viscount's death, the family has succeeded in buying back a lot of what was lost, and the result, on display here, is a collec-tion of national importance. There is also evidence that the collecting persisted among his descendants, because there are fine Samuel Palmers and excellent examples of Victorian watercolour art, including some by the queen herself. SCOTTISH BALLET The programme now on tour is the best the company has shown for quite a ome, combining tradition and creation at a high level. What could be more apt for Scotland's national company than La Sylphide, the romantic classic in which a Scottish farmer loses bride and fortune for love of a mysterious creature from the glen? Complementing this is Mark Baldwin's new ballet Ae Fond Kiss, which takes its otle from Burns's poem and its inspiration from some of Stravinsky's most attractive ballet music, The Divertimento from Le Baiser de la Fée based on melodies borrowed from Tchaikovsky.

JEFF WALL An outstanding exhibioon by an artist based in Vancouver, who works miracles with backlit transparencies. All mounted in aluminium lightboxes. Wall's images command an extraordinary range of moods and subjects. At his most disturbing he shows butchered Soviet soldiers rising from the dead on an Afghanistan battlefield. At his most serene he photographs the Canadian landscape with an eye for its mountainous magnificence. But he also finds disquiet in the countryside, especially when two riflemen pursue an undisclosed quarry in scrubland. Wall's use of the camera is often masterly, and always informed by a pro-found response to the history of Western painting.

THE CHANGING ROOM David Storey's rugby-league play, first staged in 1971, more than merits its place in the Royal Court's season of "classics in the West End". What might at first seem the real action, a crunch match, occurs offstage. And what we see as the players gather before the game, tumble inside at half-time and prepare to go home has an undercast quietly sketch in lives and microcosm of a changing world where fulfilment is rare and camaraderie precarious.

TAKEMITSU TRIBUTE Last month, when the Japanese composer Toru Takemitsu died, harsh critics pointed out that he had written all his ground-breaking works early in his life, then tended to repeal the formula with variations. That may be accurate but misses the point: Takemitsu found an exquisite and original way of expressing himself that was contemporary yet beguiling. He was wise to stick with it. Here, the BBC Symphony Orchestra under Andrew Davis plays his Towards the Sea II. followed by Mozart's Piano Concerto, K595, (Lars Vogt the soloist) and Vaughan Williams's Pastoral Symphony.

LIDGE Closing week for two contrasting chanteuses. Annie Ross's blues and torch songs many from her new DRG disc. Music is Forever - are delivered with all the authority and wit you would expect from so seasoned a performer. Better known for her soft-rock ballads, Rita Coolidge has been dipping her toe into the showtune repertoire at the Green Room. Amid tributes to Peggy Lee, she finds space for the 1970s hits The Way You Do The Things You Do and We're All Alone. Ross: Pizza On The Park, Knightsbridge, London SWI (017)-235 5273). Tonight, Mon to Sat 30, 9.15pm and 11.15pm. Coolidge: Café Royal, Regent St, London W1 (0171-437 9090). Tonight. Tue 26 to Sat 30, 9.15pm.

DAVE HOLLAND It was al Ronnie Scott's nearly three decades ago that Dave Holland caught the eye of Miles Davis, who subsequently enticed the young Brinsh bass player to America. An elder statesman of the ECM label. Holland has consistently produced challenging and creative smallgroup music. His latest quartet, which can be heard on the new album Dream of the Elders, features saxophonist Eric Person and Steve Nelson on vibraphone and marimba.

Ronnie Scott's Club, Frith St. London WI (0171-439 0747). Mon 25 to Sat 30, support set from 9.30pm.

cancel an American tour after the authorities declined to issue frontman Shaun Ryder with a visa. They postponed their last British dates when rapper Kermit was hospitalised with a lung infection. And they just missed out on a Brit for Best Newcomer. But you can't keep a band as good as Black Grape down for long, and, with a vocalist called Psycho standing in for the errant Kermit, they are back for another bite of the cherry. Their show remains a unique and irresistible rap n roll experience dubbed, on this outing, The Fau Neck Tour" after a new song which could be their next single.

Admittedly, the single household person can develop some add habits when there is nobody around to draw the line. Personally, I talk to myself more or less non-stop.
But the biggest danger for the person living alone is not that your selfish wishes drive you into strange compulsions to fill the half with jam jars or old pennice or samething. Butter pennies or something. Rather it's the reverse: that when your own wishes are the only ones consulted, sometimes you find you can't summun any strong enough to make a decision. Domestic loopholes thus widen and deepen until they are veritable mantraps with spikes in. For example, you might ask yourself, in from of a sink full of dirty plates. Where do I stand on this washing up issue?" and instead of answering, switch the light off and go to bed with a Kitkat.

hen I first lived alune, I quickly identified the greatest freedom for the single woman: that when things gu wrong with the washing machine or the central hearing, she can "get a man in". She makes the deci-sion: she consults the Yellow Pages: a day or so later a taciturn fellow in overalls turns up with a spanner and sets to. What a relief, not to negotiate this minefield with the boyfriend, who has always fancied himself in a Zanussi boilersuit, and whose ego when he breaks the washing machine has to be handled with extreme delicacy. Bang. Clink. Oops. How did that happen?" is possibly the most miserable sequence of noises ever heard by cohabiting women, while the worst sight is the room filled with pink brick dust where all-day drilling has failed to result in shelving of any kind. Actually, I was always happy in couples. I am fairly good at living with other people. I like men generally, and am much less bitter and suspicious than many married women my age. But old Tim Rice got it right when he wrote that deathless line in the hit song I Know Him So Well which went, "No one is completely on your side". It's true: we are all alone really, when it boils down to it. The rest is just wishing. I remember the day, years ago, when I found an orange folded plastic thing under the bed un the boyfriend's side and asked him innocently, "What's this?" "It's a smoke hood." he said. "In the event of fire, I can put it over my head and get out of the flat without succumbing to life-threatening fumes." I looked at it. and turned it over in my hands. "Is there just the one? I wanted to ask, but I knew I couldn't face the inevnable answer. So I put it back under the bed and thought what a profound fellow Tim Rice was, if he did but know it.

So the Mintel people find that by the year 2000, 30 per cent of households in this country will be single-person. Advertisers will take note. The image of the sad person with the TV dinner will be completely overturned, to become a happy person with a TV dinner. As the ads for Get Shorty keep telling us, attitude plays a part. One day they will remake Batmon Returns, and Michelle Pfeiffer will enter that flat again, kick her shoes off and say glurnly, "Hi honey.
I'm home," and then she'll brighten up. "Oh I forgot!"
she'll say, "I'm not married!"

THE BIG SPENDERS

People in single households spend: on tobacco 23 per cent more on 10 per cent more on bread □ 9 per cent more on organic foods 30 per cent more on fares and travel ☐ 26 per cent more on household services ☐ 36 per cent more on fuel, light and power ☐ 49 per cent more on housing ☐ 21 per cent less on motoring

y the year 2000, the number of people living alone will increase by 1.2 million to 8 million, according to Mintel's latest survey (see left). This could be good news for any Chancellor looking for ways to increase consumer spending. Non-retired, sin-gle-person households spend 10.5 per cent more than con-retired people living in a two-adult household. The taxman would be happy too. Income from VAT would rise significantly. The pubbe sector borrowing requirement could be paid off in weeks by the increase in spendiog on tobacco and alcohol by this new mass of solitary, non-retired people. Each person in a two-adult household buys roughly a packet of cigarettes per week, whereas a person living alone puffs through a packet and a half. They also drink nearly 35 per cent more alcohol than the individual in a two-adult household. Food consumption would only be affected marginally — singles spend 21 per cent more than sharers. Non-retired single people may become drunk, cancerous and slightly fatter, but at least we might not be in debt. These figures apply to those who are not retired. With those who are, the picture is a little different. Solitary pensioners dependent on the state spend £75.67 per week, whereas two similarly dependent pensioners living together spend £72.32 each per week; a difference of 4.6 per cent. The figures for pensioners who do not depend on the state are £142.91 and £118.42; a difference of 20.7 per cent. (Interestingly, the poorer the single pensioner, the more he or she smokes. The solitary state-dependent pensioner spends £2.10 on tobacco, whereas those who are not state dependent spend E1.30.) The average weekly expenditure for all single-person households (retired and non-retired) is £147.17, and for shared households the figure is £145.56 person. This means that by 2000, consumer expenditure could increase by just over £100 million a year.

There are non-financial benefits too. With the increase in singleperson households, the nation's gardens will be better maintained. In a sample week last year, 67 per cent of singles carried out some form of gardening, whereas only 56 per cent of sharers got their fingers green. We will be a better-read nation as well. Seventy-eight per cent of singles read books for up to one or more hours per week, whereas the figure for those who share was a derisory 65 per cent.

Cover image of Greta Garbo by C. S. BULL, The Kobal Collection

But the increase has its downside. For a start, we will be less fit, because only 54 per cent of singles exercise in a given week, whereas for sharers the figure is 61 per cent. Social security bills may increase. The family is effectively an unpaid social security system, but the state will need to subsidise those who live on their own and are incapable of, say, cleaning.

The predicted increase in the singlehouseholder population will have a huge impact on housing. Thirty per cent of singles live in flats, which means that 360,000 more flats may have to be found by 2000. Twenty-six per cent of singles live in their own terrace house, which means that 312.000 more terrace houses could be occupied by singles by the same year. This may lead to an increase in house prices. An increase in single-person households means an increase in the number of households, which will mean a greater demand for housing.

However, the dearth of suitable properties available for single people may just stop this explosion of

Andrew Daniels and Ruth Gledhill after their marriage was blessed

Ruth Gledhill, the Times religion correspondent, is the subject of the column she usually writes each week ancing duo defy the trend

and religion correspondent Ruth Gledhill and Andrew Daniels, a former champion Old Time dancer, have defied the trend discussed above and abandoned single life. They married a month ago, far from cold, damp Britain on the sun-drenched St James' beach in Barbados. With only an Anglican priest present, the couple asked two fellow holidaymakers to be witnesses to the wedding. But after their Caribbean privacy, the newlyweds wanted a blessing of their marriage back in Britain for family, friends and colleagues. Even after the move of so many famous newspapers from their spiritual home in Fleet Street. the couple chose the Street's tradijournalists' church. St Bride's, for their service.

The Archbishop of York. Dr David Hope, officiated and preached at the service. Wearing episcopal cope and gold mitre, he referred in his homily to the couple meeting on the dance floor on Valentine's Day last year. "Ruth and Andrew will be doing their fair share of dancing in their hearts as well as on their feet," he said.

Throughout the service, the Archbishop was assisted by the Rector of St Bride's, Canon John Oates and the father of the bride. the Rev Peter Gledhill.

Fortunately, no big religious news story broke last Saturday because all the national newspaper religion correspondents were at St Bride's, along with other journalists, as well as Andrew's colleagues — "he works in finance" - and other friends, including the two witnesses from Barbados. The congregation was a curious mixture of journalists, dancers, family, clergy and business people.

The couple dedicated themselves to each other after two contrasting readings - Ecclesiastes 2 (a time to mourn and a time to dance) and George Herbert's poem Love Bade give to you, all that I am I share with you, within the love of God".

The Archbishop referred to the challenge of faithfulness; that marriage is "truly an awesome vocation and commitment for which daily you will need God's help".

The new bride looked beautiful in a dress which was a clever combination of wedding and ballroom. She and her husband looked ready to launch into a waltz at any moment. They selected two of the most popular, tradicional hymns for their service. Guide Me O Thou Great Redeemer and Jerusalem, and two modern songs, Be Still and Amazing Grace.

The bride's father, a retired priest in the Church of Wales, added a wonderful, personal touch to his daughter's blessing when he offered intercessions in Welsh and the responses in English.

As he burst into Welsh, some of the journalists, wondering at first if he was "speaking in tongues", looked around the church to see if Naomi Hyamson, a sub-editor The Times, sang Laudamus Te by Bach as the couple were ngratulated in the vestry after the liturgy. Printed on the order of service Nuntians Quid Novi (Art. R Jonesi looked a new innovation as a wedding march. In a happy final touch New York. New York in 'sing something simple" style brought huge smiles to the newly blessed couple and congregation, who then headed off to the reception at the Waldorf Hotel. where the afternoon tea dance was in full swing as guests arrived.

Indeed, the whole day was a joyful celebration of a new begin ning - a life shared and a love which flourishes after that first glance on the dance floor.

GARDEN ANSWERS

How can I persuade my gloriosa lilies to flower? The tubers increase greatly and are fai and healthy, but all I get are leaves. - R.K.J. Owens, Sherborne, Dorset.

A Gloriosa rothschild-iana is a climbing member of the lily family and produces twining stems up to 6ft long, with orangered turk's cap flowers from June 10 August. I wonder if you are starting the tubers into growth early enough. They should be started in February, with little water but plenty of heat (16C-t9C). until they get going. Make sure they get full light, and give them a liquid, highpotash feed (eg. tornato feed) and ample water during active summer growth.

Q Two years agn I was given a morning glory (îpomoca) plant hut i am sure which species it is. It has spread along a south-facing fence but will not flower. Could it be that my neighbnur's bedge bebind the fence is sapping oourishmeot from the soil? Mrs.J.M. Edwards. Billericay, Essex.

There is a puzzle here, which I think only you can sort out. The species of ipomoea we can grow in this country are distinctly tender and often best treated as annuals (some are annuals). They are known for their trumpet-shaped flowers similar to bindweed. The marive or blue ipomoea tricolor is commonest and its sky-blue variety, 'Heavenly Blue, is readily available. Slightly hardier, but with smaller flowers, is the perennial Ipomoea purp-urea. However, all ipomoeas have heart or arrowshaped leaves. The leaf you sent me, with seven lobes almost like a horse chestnut, looks suspiciously like passion flower (Passiflora caerulea). You will soon know when it flowers, to which end give it lots of muck and water and pray for good summers.

Can yoo tell me of a lawn-sand dispenser which stops dispensing when you come to a halt? - G.T.C. Woollen, Cobham. Surrey.

A Rolary "cyclone" fertiliser/lawn-sand spreaders have the nasty habit of starting and stopping with an overdose. The knack is to start and stop gradually, so that by the time the forward motion siops and the distributor ceases to spin, it is virtually empty. On small lawns it is a good idea to cover the area rwice at half rate, to ensure an even cover. Large lawns are faster done in one go.

You mentinned Bor-deaux mixture some weeks ago. What exactly is it, and where cao I get it? -Sir Robert Atkinson. Winchester. Hampshire.

Bordeaux mixture is an old-fashioned cop-per sulphate-based fungi-cide, which still has its uses Bordeaux mixture is against potato blight and fungal diseases in fruit. It is bought as a powder and mixed with water. Vitax sells it through garden cen-tres at £2.22 for 175gm. Be careful using it with metal containers as it can corrode.

we just have to put up with. Houses alongside roads have the choice of shutting themselves off from the view (and the light) with tall coni-fers. Or they can abandon their front gardens to the car and plant nothing. Or they can, as I hope to do, filter the traffic with screen planting. I am off to a good start. In a cypresses or laurels, perhaps. But viewed from indoors, a tracery of twigs in winter is much less oppressive than a wall of evergreens. And the anyway, so it retains a few leaves right through, Evergreens by roads struggle to look their best. Traffic dust dulls their sheen, and sall spray can damage cypresses. But they do filter noise and ciduous species. A deciduous screen, however, filters winter winds more efficiently than evergreens, ft is the fate of evergreens always to take the full brunt of the wind at all times of year. Close to solid walls and houses, buffeting can cause a permanent outward lean.

So I shall stick with my screen of deciduous small trees, for the sake of traffic insulation. Gardening among their roots will not be easy. The wall under their canopy faces east to the house. I shall lift the lower branches here and there to wall height; so that we can see properly the flint wall underneath. And, instead of the present tangle of unweedable, prostrate cotoneaster underneath the trees, I shall start a bulbery in the rooty shade.

At present, the prostrate cotoneaster is sprawling over a gravel mulch. It is not a success. Where the cotoneaster leaves gaps of bare gravel. fallen leaves that are too small to rake off the gravel, gradually rot down into it. Gravel mulches work out in the open but not under the fall-out of trees. Fortunately the gravel covering is not so thick that it cannot be topped off with compost and simply worked into the soil.

With luck it will be moist enough to grow primroses, too. I would like to plant a few different colours and let them seed as they will.

Some years ago I visited a cemetery on the Continent. The grave stones there, many with canopies of painted midnight blue studded with gold and silver stars, had had primroses and polyanthus years. Now there was a whole palette of graded intermediate colours seeding everywhere,

Backstage at Newby Hall

especially during the next -month, is important to any garden, but for Chris Jakeman, the head gardener at Newby Hall in North Yorkshire, it is vital. Newby's gardens extend to 25 acres and have been described as "Hidcote on a grand scale", with a series of interlinking, formal enclosures, a formidable range of plants and an impeccably high standard of maintenance. With the 18th-century house, the gardens attract about 100,000

Until the gardens open on April 2, March is a period of intense preparation to ensure they are kept healthy and tidy until to closing at the end of September. During the season, Newby is closed only on Mondays (open Bank Holidays), which does not allow for extensive work.

Newby is gardened and managed by its owners, Robin and Jane Compton. They inherited from his father in the 1970s, when the garden was in need of drastic rejuvenation. Mr Compton is president of the National Council for the Conservacion of Plants and Gardens (NCCPG) and holds the national collection of cornus at Newby. In 1994, he was awarded the Royal Horticultural Society's highest award, the Victoria Medal of Honour. But he is certain that his credentials as a distinguished plantsman would not, alone, ensure the necessary smooth progress from one year to another, as they might in a smaller, private garden.

Planning out-of-season maintenance is important, beginning with a thorough inspection each October. The Comptons, with Mr Jakeman, review the gardens area by area, noting down what will be done through the coming months. Much is annual routine: pruning back trees and shrubs to keep paths clear and reseeding grass worn away by thousands of feet. But it is rare that a winter season goes by without a special project being started.

During the 12 years that Mr Jakeman has been at Newby, sections of the famous 300-yard double border have been completely replanted. The work involved lifting and splitting old clumps of perennials and introducing new plants (carried out during March). At the same time, shrubs that had become too large were removed and the planting returned to being predominantly herbaceous, not a mixture of perennials with shrubs. This winter the stone balustrading of a bridge has been completely removed. The work was essential after some loose masonry was spotted. The stonework has been repaired where necessary and put back with new mortar to ensure its safety. When I visited recently, Mr Jakeman, with one of the other four gardeners, was sawing and clearing away the timber and debris from a Colorado spruce (Picea pungens). They had just felled the tree that had long been a stately feature by the car park. Although not dead, the tree showed sufficient signs of ill health to cause some concern at the prospect of branches dropping without warning. The number of visitors makes path maintenance a never-ending job, much of which has to be left until the last weeks before opening. The main paths through the gardens, which total more than a mile, are gravel, as grass is easily worn away. The decisive long-term improvement came recently with the painstaking installation of board edging, which keeps the gravel on the paths and retains a neat grass edge. None the less, gravel has to be replaced each year and this is done as late as possible before opening to minimise the effect of heavy winter rain or snow. It

From now until the opening, the priority for Mr Jakeman is mulching the borders - as it is for most gardeners. The difference is one of scale: at Newby four men, with two garden tractors and trailers, work in tandem back and forth out to all parts of the gardens from the mountainous compost heap, where they are loaded by a mechanical digger.

The mulching takes two weeks but events, and the weather, rarely allow this to be uninterrupted. More than any other job, however, it guarantees the ability of a border to sustain healthy plants through to autumn. The compost mixture of garden rubbish and cuttings, leaf mould, farmyard manure and spent straw, provides plant feed, soil improvement and moisture retention on a long-term basis. Come a drought in June or July, Mr Jakeman and his team rarely face acute

s the borders and beds are being mulched, there is similar activity in the long range of glasshouses in the walled garden. Here one gardener is kept busy almost full-time providing new plants. The numbers involved (thousands annually) make it imperative for Newby to be largely self-sufficient in plant stocks. For the next few weeks seed-sowing and growing-on cuttings combines with lookng after half-hardy and tender plants that have been brought in for protected

Having a range of plants available in large quantities ensures that the gardens are able to offer the level of presentation that will satisfy public scrutiny. It means, for instance, that the inevitable gaps between a group of newly planted young shrubs can be temporarily filled until the plants have matured to spread over their allotted area.

Public safety and presentation are two keys to large gardens attracting sufficient visitors to make the enormous work and cost of their maintenance viable. At Newby nowhere is the safety element better shown than in the "Adventure Garden". Swings, pedal-boats and other children's amusements are integrated into a landscape of grass banks and ponds, and rigorously inspected daily.

The final touch before opening will be cutting the acres of grass, preferably more than once, so that the lawns take on the neatness they will wear for the next six here are some gar-dens that don't need blurb, they sell themselves. Houses with a very special garden, or a link with a distinguished garden designer, such as Gertrude Jekyll, will not be cheap, but will hold their value well and are always in demand.

Garden with house attached

A prominent or historic garden, well maintained, can add up to 50 per cent to property value, says Patrick amsay, of Knight Frank.

About 1.200 parks and gar-dens, both public and private, are listed Grade I, Grade II or II* by English Heritage, which started its Register of Historic Parks and Gardens for Eng-land in 1984. More are added every year, but no garden created less than 30 years ago

There is no statutory protection for registered gardens. but there is an obligation to ed to influence local authorities who might be considering applications to build an annex or a swimming pool in a listed garden. It also helps with priorities for aid from English Heritage, which sometimes gives grants for the repair and replanting of historic gardens.

Reading between the lines

ust how do you find a house with a good garden? Estate agents, whose job it is to know about houses, have to be impossibly careful about the descriptions of the houses they sell. Legis tion - and the threat of criminal charges - obliges them to be factual and truthful. or to say nothing at all. It must quite take the sport out of salesmanship.

When it comes to describing gardens, about which some estate agents may know next to nothing, they are even cagier. It makes judging whether a house has a good garden exquisitely frustrating. I know. I've just bought one.

With gardens, as with bouses, you must learn to read between the lines. Or between the words, as is more frequently the case. For agents say so very little about gardens in their particulars. What they do say is in code. How do you find a sheltered garden for instance? When describing a house, "wealth of beams" are always "exposed", as if the beams are visible not because that was how the house was built, but because of some recent furious DIY adventures. (My own house was, I believe, unique for its wealth" of stripped doors.) But gardens, however bleak, are never exposed in Essex and Cambridgeshire. Outdoors 'exposed" is a dirty word. Instead, the house will "look over open farmland".

If there's a decent chunk of garden between you and the prairies, then the garden "gives onto open farmland". If the strip of garden is so narrow that you are in danger of an agricultural sprayer boom parting your hair as you stand at the basin to shave every morning, then the house is, once again, "looking over open farmland". If you want genuinely attractive distant views, with woods and interesting landform, then you are in the market for a "magnificent" outlook.

One rule of thumb, indoors and out, is that the more unimportant detail is mentioned - the abundance of double sockets, that vital and quite indispensible outside tap - then the less substantial is the property. If the particulars mention an outside tap, put the house to the bottom of

Though estate agents are not permitted to bend the truth, the camera might still do it for them. If you are looking for somewhere quiet in the country, away from traffic, then beware the wide angle

those sales details really mean lens. I travelled to see one house only to find that what looked like my new driveway and flowerbeds were a Tjunction on the village street and the garden of the house opposite. There was no point going inside. Relationships to roads are a vexed point. Some people do not mind passing traffic; others go into a rage if a diesel engine comes within 500 yards. So what is a poor estate agent to say? If a house merely has "flower beds to the front", it seems to mean there is just room for a few marigolds before the tarmac and juggernauts start. "Lawned area" means a miserable patch of grass which could, at a push, be part of the "ample off-street parking". The real difficulty about describing a garden is that it is the owner's taste you must describe, just as it would be if you were to describe their soft furnishings or bed linen. It is particularly personal, and an agent has to be careful to offend no one.

As a buyer, it pays to be absolutely frank with an agent about your needs no lawn, no flowers, and no work please!" - or "total privacy, shelter, mature trees, at least half an acre, no tarty linle ponds and no dwarf conifers". In deference to his client, the agent can never say "God, yes, I know what you mean!"

but boy, will a tight brief save you some wasted time.

If you want to find a particularly interesting garden, look out for mention of garden structure - the equivalent of indoor rooms — by way of terraces, large hedges; separate lawns, and walls. (Only watch out for "dwarf walls", which can turn out to be a spreading, cancerous form of barbecue.)

The word "mature" has unfortunately to be taken with a pinch of salt. Too often it proclaims a lifeless garden. "Laid to lawn, with mature trees and shrubs" represents a 15-year-old birch and perhaps a cherry, with deadly banks of berberis and potentilla stagnating quietly on the grass. Fine if you want no work, but unpromising for an enthusiast.

Some magazines, including Country Life and Gardens Illustrated, have taken to publishing an occasional property page of houses for sale (like those above) with particularly wonderful gardens. So there must be enough people out there with sufficient cash and interest to pounce on one of these complex, designer gardens.

Occasionally you may see a house with a plantsman's garden for sale as a small ad in the back of a specialist horticultural magazine. But most of us are left to ponder the estate agent's blurb and decipher promise among the bare Daradoxically, agents are the first to admit that an attractive garden sells a house quickly, although an "overstocked garden" can put off people who do not want much maintenance. Well, fine. Give us "heavily stocked" gardens to view, if that is what it takes to find an interesting one.

Just give us something. It cannot help anyone to say so very little. No need for Latin names for sure, but say if there are sheets of daffodils and bluebells, wellmaintained and productive apples, pears and a plum (not "mature fruit trees"). climbing roses to the eaves, and a pond full of koi carp. These things all have a value, and it's huge.

The house I didn't get had a wonderful garden and, at the far end under the churchyard wall, was a quince in full fruit. You could smell it from yards away sweet, spicy and deliciously autumnal. What price a fruiting quince? £10? £1,000? £2,000? Not a word?

■ MARK KNOPFLER Golden Heart

Vertigo/Mercury 514 732★ HE REMAINS the architect of the best-selling British album ever recorded - Brothers in Arms by Dire Straits — so you can never count him out completely. But even by the standards of a man who has long made a virtue out of being unfashionable, Mark Knopfler sounds a trifle out of touch on his first solo album. Golden Heart.
A collection of sedate rock and love songs, flavoured with discreet Celtic and countrymusic textures, it is performed with Knopfler's customary ease and consummate fluency Locating an unlikely point in the no man's land between roots-rock and easy listening where penny whistle meets pedal steel, the opening track, Darling Pretty, finds this politist of pickers at his most lugubrious: "There will come a day, Darling Pretty/There will come a day when hearts

That is as may be, but not for one moment does it look as if this album will fly. As the gruff, harely whispered ballad of Golden Heart itself gives way to the soothing shuffle of No Can Do and the prim romanticism of A Night in Summer Long Ago ("My lady, may I have this dance?"), you find yourself longing for something, anything, to happen.

There are moments when the pulse quickens, as on Cannibals, a retooled version of the Dire Straits hit Walk of Life with Cajun trimmings. And Imeldn introduces a heavier guitar sound along with a handful of southern blues licks. (The lyric is about Imelda Marcos's penchant for buying shoes; how current is

MEL GIBSON'S medieval epic is vigorous and sometimes exciting. But you need a taste for slied cheats. gouged eyes and impaled chests to survive three hours of bloody battles between William Wallace's rebel army of Scotland and the forces of Edward I. The plot has few subtleties to soften the violence, and the romance with Sophie Marceau's Princess never seems more than a means towards tender close-ups. But if Gibson is your man, you have a feast: sinewy arms, strapping legs, kilt flying in the heather. Available

■ WINSOR McCAY: ANIMATION LEGEND

Academy, E MARVELLOUS compilation tape of the animated films of Winsor McCay, the comic-strip genius of Little Nemo in Slumberland, who also made some of the most beguil-ing and elegant of America's early cartoons. The tape, produced from prints in the Cinémathèque Québecoise, includes Gertie the Dinosaur (used in a stage act) and the staggeringly detailed Sinking of the Lusitania (1918), which took nearly two years to complete and used 25,000 drawings.

Riding high and handsome: Mel Gibson swings a mean kilt in the role of William Wallace in his vigorous medieval epic. Braveheart

■ WITHNAIL & I

CIC, 15, 1987 BRUCE ROBINSON'S cult comedy, a quirky memoir of the swing-ing 1960s' darker side. Richard E. Grant and Paul McGann are the two would-be actors who escape from the fug of their Camden Town flat for a miserable holdiay in the Lake District. Robinson's timing may be erratic, but his dialogue cuts to the quick. McGann's bemused innocent is very appealing, but now more than ever this is Grant's show. His Withnail is outrageously selfcentred, an endless fountain of caustic remarks, and his black bile keeps the film alive.

LENGTHY but impressive drama about the French Resistance's fight for a trainload of art treasures bound for Nazi Germany. "Smashing up the trains was easy to do -- it's every boy's childhood fantasy." said director John Frankenheimer. He realises the fantasy with consummate skill and no noticeable models. With Burt Lancaster, Paul Scofield, and Jeanne Moreau.

■ POCAHONTAS

Disney, U, 1995 THIS sanitised version of 17thcentury history is something of a backward step for Disney cartoons after the exuberance of Aladdin and the narrative power of The Lion King. English adventurer Captain John Smith and the Native Ameri-can girl Pocahontas throb usefully with romantic love, and young audiences should enjoy Miss Ps pets, a scampering racoon and a hummingbird. But there is little punch to the tale, and the animation lacks the details that give cartoon characters personality.

in inspiration and in places quite evocative. McChrystal, who plays with both lyrical sensitivity and energy, is less inclined to vulgarise this kind of music than Harle, and the London Musici under Mark Stephenson provide animated support. If you like this sort of thing, this is a disc that can be safely recommended.

that runs to more than three hours. He (or the lead mezzo) has the best arias, and the longest ones, as he sees his beloved Princess Ginevra snatched from him through disguise and deception before all is resolved in the grand hall of the royal Scottish palace and virtue is declared triumphant. Lorraine Hunt has plenty of colour at her command as happiness descends to despair in Act II, notably in Scherza infida, a massive and demanding piece. She lacks nothing in agility and freshness: a young lover to match the Handel young lover's music.

Hunt also blends creamily with Juliana Gondek's bright and occasionally brittle soprano as Ginevra in their final ecstatic duet of reunion. Very classy singing.

Long and Short of popular song

Clive Davis meets the venerable custodian of

estling on his sofa in his immaculately furnished apartment, Bobby Short reflects oo the subtle art of cultivating an audience. Saloon singers need to know about these things because, by the very nature of their work, they do not usually fill stadiums. As Short says, "I'm still oot playing Madison Square Garden, as you can see."

For that we should be grateful: a small venue is the place to savour his wit and style. For half a century or more he bas been a curator of popular song, a debonair interpreter of the best of Broadway and Tin Pan Alley. The doyen of New York cabaret artists, he has used his extraordinary, quartercentury residency at the ritzy Café Carlyle to champioo not just the Cole Porter songs that everyone knows, but the obscure yet no less interesting numbers that, in the age of Snoop Doggy Dogg, might otherwise be lost

When Woody Allen was looking for a song to accompany the credits on Manhattan Murder Mystery, his choice alighted on Short's recording of

Cole Porter's I Happen to Like New York. The topography of the singer's favourite city also provides the theme of his vibrant new album, recorded live at the Carlyle with a superb swing band featuring cornetist Warren Vache. Songs of New York (Telarc CD-83346) throws together a cocktail of famous standards - among them the aforementioned Manhattan and Autumn in New York - as well as curiosities such as Way Out West on West End Avenue.

Short's career almost foundered in the 1960s, when, like so many of his neers, he found himself displaced by the Beatles and the pop revolution. The Carlyle residency, which began with a two-week stint in 1968, was to transform his life, making him a wealthy man in the process. But, having grown up poor and black in Illinois, he has never lost the instinct to, as he puts it, "keep an extra chicken in the refrigerator".

"The situation is a little better than it was in the 1960s. But the life of cabaret is a sad story these days. In the old days Lena Horne would do eight weeks at the Empire Room, then she'd take a month off and work four weeks in Las Vegas, two weeks in Miami. Then she could do the theatres. It was a career. There's no more career of that nature."

Bobby Short: a 25-year residency

Still, he does not give the impression of succumbing to melancholia. The dominant tooe of his conversation and of his two volumes of autobiography - is one of defiant joie de vivre. There is always the next show to think of, and one day, he says, he might even learn to read music properly. If he fails, well, he can always comfort himself with the advice of another non-reader, his friend, Erroll Garner. "Man, who in hell's gonna hear you read!"

I wo children go FREE on a Tussauds day out save up to £26

The Times and The Tussauds Group are offering readers the chance to take two children free to any one of eight Tussauds attractions throughout April and May, saving up to £26.

There are white-knuckle rides and haunted woodlands, ice skating shows and circuses, a grisly Chamber of Horrors and an adventure into space, simulated rock concerts and medieval pageants. Everything that will keep children happy and entertained is on offer here and at two theme parks in Spain and Holland.

The theme park renpens today for another season of fun, thrills and excitement for all the family. The park was originally Chessington Zoo until an £18 million refit turned it into one of the South's leading outdoor leisure attractions. Rare and endangered species, such as snow leopards and Sumatran tigers, can be seen in landscaped enclosures reflecting their natural habitat.

There is a new circus, a Hänsel and Gretel-style land for toddlers, a Vampire rollercoasier and, set in a wild western Calamity Canyon. the Runaway Mine Train, an exhilarating Dragon River nating Rameses Revenge, the only ride in the UK with a three way fear factor of height, speed and water which suspends the brave over water fountains for up to ten seconds.

Clifford Stoll's Cuckoo's Egg, the excellently told story of how Stoll and that is where it should have stopped. But each season since has brought a new clutch of heroic tales of men who dash fearlessly about the Internet dishing it with the punks who steal the Net's secrets.

Shimomura's is the latest and the most risible. ft is not that I am ungrateful: I am only too pleased that this scientific prodigy was able to set up the routines which caught Kevin Mitnick, stealer of mobiletelephone software and Internet passwords or, as the book has it, the world's most notorious cybercriminal 1 am. after all, a mobile-telephone owner and an Internet user and recognise that the Mitniks of this world spoil it for the

And I certainly cannot be convinced that the details of Shimomura's hobbies - in-line skating and crosscountry skiing — add to the excitement any more that does a sub-plot about the wooing of his girlfriend.

Happily there is a simplified version of the book - and one which, with its pictures and full audio details, really does give a sense of the excitement the reader is meant to feel. It is written by Shimomura and is available - free on the Web: http://www. takedown.com/.

Reconditioned Austen in good running order

EMMATENNANT has made a deserved success out of her sequels to Jane Austen. In Pemberley and An Unequal Morriage she revealed undreamt-of pitfalls in the careers of the Bennet sisters just when we thought Pride and Prejudice had them settled down nicely. Now it is the turn of Sense and Sensibility.

Aside from their romantic and financial anxieties, the Dashwood girls could be said to have led rather quiet lives in Austen's original. A sprained ankle or an unexpected visitor could be moments of high drama. The novel is long on reflection and evenings round the piano, and on the whole rather short on corpses and chicanery. But now that the sisters have been lionised by Hollywood, it was probably quent adventures should involve mothers-in-law per-forming Spanish fandangos on dinner tables, free-love communes of guitar-playing egetarians and cannibalism in darkest Africa.

Restraint may have gone by the board in the plot development, but Tennant retains her gift for capturing Austen's tone and humour, and there is a mad logic to the wildest turn of events. The hints are all there in the original. Tennant simply lets them run.

Austen's happy denouement is shown to be a fragile one. Colonel Brandon, her only Hollywood, it was probably truly sensible character in the inevitable that their subsetmodern sense of the word, is promptly packed off on an errand to Wales where he remains for the duration of the story. Without his calming influence. Elinor's excess of restraint and Marianne's total lack of it prove completely unequal to fending off their rapacious in-laws and coping with the return of the scoun-drel Willoughby. Everything goes hilariously to pot.

Elinor and Marianne, like Sense and Sensibility in its first version, is written in the form of letters. It is not an easy form to get into, and perhaps a dramatis personae would have saved us from the clumsy references to "our half-brother John and his wife, Fanny". But the telling is skilful and elegant, and much entertainment is to be had.

■ JAKE'S ESCAPE
By Robin Hanbury-Tenison
Red Fox, £2.99

THE FAMOUS explorer's first children's book, categorised here as "older fiction". has the effect of making anyone over the age of ten wonder how he or she would react to sudden danger. Kidnapped by Shining Path terrorists while on holiday in Peru, 12-year-old Jake escapes with little more than a packet of boiled sweets. Because of Robin Hanbury-Tentson's deftly injected knowledge of the dark, canopied forests, Jake's survival through terrifying adventures - from a close encounter with red piranha fish to maggots in the feet — seems perfectly possible. But the inspirational quality of this thrilling story is in the blending of a mysterious magic world with the development of a sympathetic character.

Schama proceeds anecdorally, considering the signifi-cance anached — mainly in the West — to wood, water and rock. He introduces us tu Claude Denecourt, who devised the first nature trails at Fontainebleau; to Gutzon Borglum, who stamped his ideal of the American presidency on Mount Rushmore; and to modern arrists like Andy Goldsworthy. Schama's boundless intellectual energy and confidence made this one of the most exciting books of 1995.

the prosperous black community are grieving over the death of Il-year-old Mattie. in a lovingly detailed patchwork of memories and observations, Parker tells the stories of the members of the community. Parker's prose is precise and she effectively sets the novel's sense of the fragility and brevity of human life against the solid faith, work and traditions of a community bound by loyalty and common heritage. This is a novel that lingers in the imagination.

■ SPECIAL RELATIONSHIP By Robyn Sisman Mandorin, £5,99

AN OXFORD undergrad is on the trail of his true father. He has discovered a snapshot of his mother, taken 20 years earlier, in the arms of an unconfessed old flame. Mater is put on the horns of a dilemma. In America, a candidate presidential hailed as Kennedy reincarnated finds that his past has got hold of his phone number and his career is on the line. Sisman has fictionalised her alleged affair with Clinton; unfortunately this romantic thriller is littered

Beating about the Bushmen

Justin Cartwright on a Swiftean

satire of our colonial legacy

BY WHAT I have gathered from your own relation, I cannot but conclude the bulk of your narives to be the most pernicious race of little odious vermin that nature ever suffered to crawl upon the surface of the earth." Christopher Hope has taken Jonathan Swift's lines, and played out a wonderful and extended joke with them. The Bushmen of South Africa were once treated as vermin. A bounty of El was placed on their heads and they were hunted virtually to extinction. Dorkest England purports to be the log of the journey of David Mungo Booi, one of the only surviving San Bushmen, who is chosen to go to Eng-land clutching an illuminated scroll presented to his forebears by Queen Victoria, to see if that damp country is suitable for settlement. South Africa, it seems, still has no place for the yellow people, other than the back of police

The satire, however, is largely reserved for the Mother Country. In Swiftean style, Hope plasters it with welldirected ordure. From the moment he arrives in Eng-land, intent on meeting the Queen and requesting her help. Booi runs into every known form of English double-speak, hypocrisy and delusion, and quite a few more. When poor Mungo Booi is detained by immigration officers, he tries heroically to recognise the fabled qualities of the benighted English. Eventually he is released into the care of an unfrocked bishop and his capacious daughter. From there, he is more or less kidnapped by a dony nobleman, whose harem are fascinated by the condition known in anthropological circles as semi-priapism. There is no plut to speak of but a series of outrageous incidents, including, in homage to Swift, some business with an ostrich

Love ages on the Vine

IT OPENS with a haumting sentence, repeated with variations, throughout the book: The clothes of the dead won't wear long. They fret for the person who owned them." In Vineland, of course, this is not a mere passing reference to inherited garments. The Brimstone Wedding is about substituted lives; its characters are sad women who try for happiness by using emotions - and houses and husbands

- that belong to others. Stella Newland is dying of lung cancer at Middleton Hall, a residential home in Norfolk for the comfortablyoff elderly. Genevieve Warner, her native, supersutious 'care assistant", becomes ber unlikely friend and confidante, the holder of secrets the old woman has never revealed, even to her own children.

Marcel Berlins finds a breathtaking

THE BRIMSTONE WEDDING By Barbara Vine Viking, £16

Stella owns a long-neglected house nearby: Genevieve is its first visitor for more than 20 years. In the fridge, a bottle of champagne lies unopened; there is an oil painting of a woman in a pink dress and a faded photo of a couple in love. A red Ford Anglia sits in the garage. Out of these mundane accessories of past existence. Vine fashions a tender, horrifying mystery as heart-stoppingly exquisite as any-

Slowly, through the two narrators Stella and Genevieve, the events of the past unravel, complemented by Genevieve's own emotional torment. After 13 years, of marriage to her boring dependable spouse, she has fallen for a rakish television producer, a newcomer to the village. The modern lovers hold their illicit meetings in Stella's house and bed - the very scenes of the dying woman's unfolding confessions passion, deception and fear 30 years before. Past and present touch each other in other ways, too: a ploughing farmer evokes strange memories: Genevieve watches on television the old

The graceful, meandering, leisurely pace of the novel as Stella approaches a dignified death masks brilliantly the explosive revelations to come. To say that the pieces of the jigsaw suddenly fall into place suggests a mechanical process in which scattered clues come together in some sort of neat resolution. Vine is far subtler than that. The story, beautifully written, emerges delicately, yet with shocking, ironic force and breathtaking imagination, as the unlikely parallel paths of the haughty old woman and her pedestrian companion finally unite. The last sentence, like the first, ends with a provocative thought on the contracts, tax, libel, proofread ing, copyright and hooking an agent. His gift is to make these boring bits palatable.

Much more ambioous and fascinating. Brayfield tackles the Zen of fiction bestsellerdom. Her premise that stories define a puzzling world and help to defuse our more primitive fears, the most significant continuing to haunt and nourish our imaginations, is based on a study of how myth works through cultures. From there she constructs her methods of story shaping, research, narraove techniques and, of course, style. The less sparially minded might recoil from the mind maps and charts but few will disagree with the stern but excellent advice on dealing with inhibiting fears, family intrusions, the urge to stuff chocolate and the knockabout

No writer should permit the rebel and risk-taker to be beaten out of them. Rules should be broken occasionally, and the responsibility to write living, breathing novels capable of making us laugh, veep and marvel rests with the author. Nevertheless, from the GCSE student upwards writers and readers will enjoy this bold and illuminating till at unravelling the mysteries of the popular novel. Even, perhaps, the literary novelist.

A used husband is no bargain

WHEN the four Preston sis-ters are still young children, their mother accidentally runs over their baby brother, Steven, and kills him. Racked with guilt, she goes nuts, withdraws from the family, leaves Boston for London with her local gardening group, and dies there.

Naturally, Mrs Preston leaves her daughters a legacy of emotional dysfunction. With a withdrawn father who fishes and womanises in almost equal measure, the Preston sisters have to fend for themselves in life and love, which they do with rather unhappy consequences.
Underconfident Meg marries a divorced, priggish academic, and inherits not only his awful sons but weekend casseroles from their drippy mother. Capable Amy marries firstly a dissolute hippy who leaves her holding the baby. and secondly a man with a daughter from a first marriage to his zany childhood sweetheart. Acerbic Beth shuns commitment altogether, preferring casual sex and whisky. And sweet Leonora (there is, incidentally, no explanation as to why she is the only sister not named after one of Louisa M. man still married to a woman who wears electric blue and has murderous tendencies. If Second Wives sounds laughable, it is because it is meant to be. Cindy Blake is a gifted comic writer, and Second Wives is an energetic and spirited comic novel. It is melodramatic and over-sentimental, yes, but it is also enormous fun, and what sets it apart from many of its sibling blockbusters is Blake's intelligent and razor-sharp wit. She has a good ear for quick-fire dialogue (one or two of the sparkiest exchanges put me in mind of scripts by the great Nora Ephron) and groovy, grouchy Beth is a wonderful creation: her ceaseless one-liners are not only wildly funny but a good anodote to schmaltzy statements such as. "Love means never looking over the guy's shoulder for someone more interesting on the horizon", which should really be left out of all books, at all costs.

Great fun, but a word of advice for prospective second wives: it is not a manual.

Thinking of downshifting to the middle of nowhere? Jill Parkin on what to buy once the labrador and Volvo are in place

Rustic rules for new recruits

The country is fashionable agen. Good-lifers and downshifters are being phisticated ity and go simple. Take Kevin and andora Maxwell, the downshifting super-couple who have moved out of Chelsea with their five nd a half children. Maybe a lóbedroom house would not seem nuch of a downshift to most, but the things are relative.

The trouble is that incomers to the country suck on like a black paten stileno in a farmyard li takes heart to be abumpkin. You may bu yourself the four-byfour plus labrador, tal if you don't like etting either of then muddy it's no good.

Detail is di. Learn to live with nud, and add convictin to your country lifesyle with a few key bys. And steer clear if the car wash.

They come fully assembled, Flatpacks are for lownies who shop at those out-offown superstores that look as thugh they came flatpacked therselves.

The antiqued effect is what you're after generally. It is a look that is good for dos and children — and you should et about acquiring lots of both as son as you go rustic --because thy can't make it look much moreoashed about than it is already. Ditressed and antiqued is nearly a good as family

If you have a cooking range or a wood-burning stove putting out lots of kitchen heat, use it to dry your clothes. You need a Victorian airer, which is now becoming fashionable in suburbia, where ornamental jugs and china pot-pourris are hung on them. Yours will be a working airer. Hang it above the cooker or stove, where it will darken up nicely and maybe even bend a little, and use it to dry all those chunky sweaters you and your family now live in. (Domestic Paraphernalia. 01253 736334. Airers from £35.) Dry herbs from your garden on the airer, too, but ave out the trinkers.

acceptable. The National Trust does a great farm clock with all three (£38.95) as well as a Gloucester Old Spot dustpan and brush made out of stained pine (£15.95). Keep off anything with cats — they are awfully urban. Country house umbrella stands are for walking sticks, shooting sticks, sword sticks, anything but brollies. If you get wet, take comfort, and a snifter, from your tippling stick. Past Times has a wooden one with brass handle for £14.95 (01993 770440).

According to a countryman I know it takes the breasts of two dozen pigeons to make a good pie. You could find out just how good a pie by keeping your own birds in a dovecote. Mike Butcher makes them by hand in Wreningham, Norfolk. They start at £95 and go up to £208 for a four-floor, 12-nest ob. He does pine and oak (WGF Dovecotes on 01508 489347). Real country people would think nothing of killing the young squabs to eat, but if you'd rather let the birds shaved cotton. They are tough and warm and give you that sportsman live reni-free, no one would know. Apart from the mud, it is the blood that many former townies find difficult to take about the countryside. You may not feel easy with a fox's brush hanging next to your inglenook or fancy a pair of antlers in the hall, but you're safe with moleskin trousers. # Prize catches for the complete angler

from the 1700s to the present day

antique fishing tackle covers almost anything: rods, reels, creels, anglers knives, gut-eyed flies and cased fish. John Stephenson, an angler, became so hooked by the collecting bug that he left his job as sales director of Kwik-Fit six years ago to set up The Tackle Exchange at Stoke-on-Trent, Staffordshire, dealing in new and vintage fishing tackle.

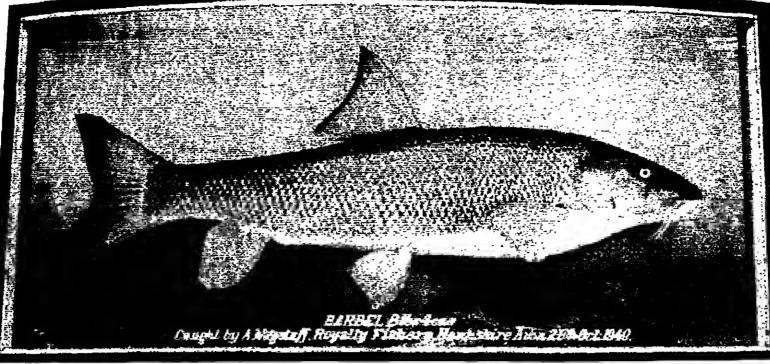

Angling has been his passion from the age of seven. when his elder brother took him lake-fishing in Perthshire. But now, landing a silver reel at auction is as thrilling as lifting a prize barbel from the nearby River Dove.

More than 100 reels sit on Mr Stephenson's shelves and he has another display behind his shop, regularly topped up with angling ephemera, landing-nets, gaffs and fly-boxes. Even lures, designed as throwaways but now worth up to E70, lead weights and hooks send ripples in the market. Mr Stephenson started his collection by chance: "I was roach-fishing in a canal when I saw an old chap nearby who was distressed because the eye had fallen off his split-cane rod, I fixed it for him and, in return, he offered me an intriguing wooden rod." Mr Stephenson's walls are lined with cased fish, including carp, rudd and trout, which lie entombed in glass boxes amid gravel and reed. Cased fish are popular collectables. A 3oz gudgeon from the 1940s sold recently at auction for £5,000. "A gudgeon is a good find, as it's rare to stuff such a tiny fish," he

One case contains a brace of sea trout - one a 17-pounder - caught, as the inscription reads, "by N.B. Spurway of Leicester, 1932". The angler was a record-holder in his day. "A collector offered me the case, and a second one, for £500," Mr Stephenson says, "and I had to have them. I drove to Walsall, got lost, and so did the collector. In the end, we agreed to meet at a n years gone by, all reels were handmade and ex-pensive. "Reelmakers were also clockmakers, skilled in filing pins and making grooves, and used to working in brass. Rods were often custom-engraved." Mr Stephenson says. In the 1930s a rod would cost the equivalent of six weeks' wages for a working man; in the 19th century it cost a year's pay.

For anyone thinking of starting a collection, Mr Stephenson recommends Nottingham reels, which are relatively easy to find. Originally made in Nottingham in the 1830s, these wooden, 3-4in beauties were used for float and coarse fishing.

Part of his fascination with antique tackle is seeing how different fishing once was: "A hundred years ago you'd soak destination. Later you would

Tackle manufacturing took off in the 1700s. Now, as collecting becomes more popular, prices are increasing. A late 19th-century 4in aerial reel, made of ebonite with an intricate spoke drum spinning like a gyroscope, cost £200 two years ago and would now fetch £500. Hooks and their original packets, from the 1840s, cost just a few pounds today, as do the gut-eyed flies, which look like colourful wisps. But for Mr Stephenson nothing beats the thrill of fishing: "Not long ago I caught my first 20lb pike," he says proudly.

How much good does walking do? After all, the Government's new health campaign recommends it

A brisk stroll through the country, or in town, helps relaxation and improves health. Dr William Bird found that many of his patients who took up walking benefited significantly

The pathway to fitness method of fitness Cumberlege, the junior Health Minister - is not a compulsory part of the Government's litness campaign unveiled this week. Nor. strictly, is going for a walk. But "vigorous exercise" having been replaced officially by moderate activity for 30 minutes a day five times a week", the health benefits of a regular, brisk walk have a solid new scheme can tell you precisely how much good that walk is doing you. When Dr William Bird went walking in the Chiltern Hills around the Oxfordshire village where he works, the footpaths were empty, and it troubled him that a vital, and free, resource in preventive treatment was so underused by his parients. "All these benefits, which help to reduce high blood pressure, the risk of a stroke, heart attack and osteoporosis are on our doorstep.

He decided that it required something more than the standard advice to take exercise that he and his colleagues gave to their 71,600 parients at the Sonning Common Health Centre, near Reading, Berkshire. People knew that walking was healthy, but how healthy? And how often, how far, and how fast should they be walking for fitness?

They needed a new type of literature, not only telling walkers about an old priory they might be passing, but also calculating the calories and METs - metabolic equivalents, a standard unit used to measure forms of exercise that they expended as they passed it. A MET is measured by the amount of oxygen used per minute per kg of weight. It has been a staple detail of car advertising that model X, driven at speed Y over a given distance, will consume Z amount of petrol. So why not a leaflet for walkers showing how the body performs when it's out for a spin?

Walks, with funding from the Countryside Commission, whose remit includes encouraging people to walk. He researched ten local routes, mostly under four miles, and divided them into two types.

"Hard top" walks are pave-ment routes in residential areas suitable for wet weather. after dark or in winter. "Soft top" walks use local footpaths. and are graded into four levels of difficulty. Both walks are intended to be fitted in after or other free time.

Dr Bird commissioned a series of colourful leaflets giving an artist's view of a walk based on an aerial photograph. The walk is described stage by stage, with detail on local history and nature. This is part of the holistic nature of the project. "It can help relaxation and give people a sense of belonging to their commun-ity." Dr Bird says.

What sets the leaflets apart from the standard walkers' library is the fitness table (see graphic, right) which Dr Bird vised with advice from Dr Adrienne Hardman of Lough-borough University. This helps walkers to calculate the cnergy expended. To assess the value of the scheme. Dr Bird is running a series of one-mile walks to test fitness levels in 106 patients aged over 50, though the Health Walks are not confined to that age group. The first was held last May. Fifty-eight months later after increasing their walks, and having received no individual advice. Seventy-five per cent of men and 66 per cent of women showed "significant" increases in fitness levels. One finding is that a 20minute walk taken within 12 hours of - before or after - a of triglycerides, the harmful fats in the bloodstream, by 25 per cent, in short, fat will be digested more efficiently if the person takes a walk.

The amount of exercise that Dr Bird recommends is therefore in line with the targets announced by the Health Education Council on Tuesday -30 minutes' exercise five time a week. He says walkers should exert themselves enough to become slightly breathless, but not so much as to interfere

Grant aid and sponsorship by local companies have not met the £13,500 cost of the scheme, so the centre is having to sell the walks in packs of ten for £10. So far, 200 packs have

Dr Bird intends to pass on the idea to other GPs and, to

The magpie: enjoying a pinta

IT HAS been known for a long rime Feather report

that blue rits will attack milk-bottles. pecking the caps and drinking the cream. Now a new villain of the doorsteps has been unmasked: the magpie. In the latest issue of British Birds, there is a report of a magpie in Southampton drinking milk from a bottle of silver-top.

The Great Anti-Magpie Lohby will be delighted to have fresh ammunition to use in its campaign — but I am nut a member of that group. Only the other day I was watching a magpie with particular pleasure. It was feeding on the ground (as it usually does), and the early morning sun was bringing out its amazing glossy coluurs. It is not really a hlack and white bird, though it looks like une at a distance.

On this bird, I could see the purpleblue back and the glimmering green crown, the brilliant blue wings, and the shining bronzen-green tail turning purple at the rip. It was an exoric spectacle. Magpies have been providing another striking spectacle recently. They have been gathering in flocks in treetops, chattering noisily, then flying off in a single line.

What is the purpose of these gatherings? Now that magpies are so numerous, many of them fail to get hold of a territory to breed in and are condemned to remain unntated for the rest of the season. They live in loose flocks, wandering about looking for food. The prevailing view is that in these gatherings they put on aggressive displays, involving much raising uf crown leathers and puffing up of white shoulder-feathers, in order to establish a pecking order.

Those magpies that have successfully set theniselves up as pairs in breeding territories are now beginning to build their bulky nests. They like to build in a thick tree or tall bush, and they make their nests of thorny twigs. lining them with earth and a little mat of roots. Both sexes take part in the construction, and the female lays several blue or green eggs mottled with brown.

I like to watch them when they are building. They are slow, clumsy flyers at the best of times, and when one of them has a long stick held crosswise in its beak it really struggles through the air. With its fong tail, it looks just like a flying cross of Lorraine.

ΓRAVEL Burma's tourist dilemma

Is it right to take a holiday in a country run by a despotic junta? Yes, says

Peter Hughes

Tragedy and comedy wear the same masks in the benighted nation of Burma. If there is a twinkle in the eyes, the mouth grieves; if there is a smile on the lips, the eyes shed tears. It is a country that has been plundered, morally and economically, by the demented General Ne Win, who seized power in 1962. Although he stood down from the presidency 14 years ago, he has continued to pull the strings of the junta from behind the gun emplacements of his villa on the outskirts of the capital. Yangon (formerly Rangoon).

Ne Win is a lunatic in the astrological sense of the word, a man so superstitious that when an astrologer told him that right was better than left, he instantly ordered the nation's traffic to move from the left to the right side of the road. In homage to his lucky number, nine, he summarily replaced 50 and 100 kyat notes with denominations of 45 and 90. No warning was given nor compensation paid to those with savings in the old money.

The country is governed by the State Law and Order Restoration Council. SLORC for short, an acronym that could have been drawn from a lexicon of preposterous names for ruthless dictatorships. In 1990, to universal surprise, democratic elections were held. To the surprise of no one, except the regime, the main opposition party. led by Aung San Suu Kyi, swept the board with a three-to-one majority. So shocked was the Government that it disregarded the result and placed Aung San Suu Kyi under house arrest, In 1991 she was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize, and was released last year. Such caprices might almost be comic were they not accompanied by brutality. Recently, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights published a catalogue of abuses — torture. executions, forced labour, rape, politically motivated arrests and detention. Economically Burma, or Myanmar as it wishes to be known, is slumped in the middle of the UN's list of the 1en poorest countries. And this is a nation. rich in minerals, which once grew enough rice to supply its neighbours.

Aung San Suu Kyi, the Nobel Peace Prize winner, says tourists should stay away from Burma until democracy reigns

On another whim, because they do not have the infrastructure to support it, the generals have declared 1996 to be Visit Myanmar Year". The question is, should anyone visit such a country?

Tourism Concern, an organisation set up to prod the conscience of anyone who ignores the damage lourism can do, says no. Tricia Barnett, the director. claims tourism itself is contributing to the ill-treatment of the Burmese people. Tourism development in Burma is associated with gross human rights abuse, such as displacement and forced labour." She quotes Aung San Suu Kvi's call for a halt to investment and for tourists to stay away until democracy is restored.

In the past 12 months I have made two visits to Burma, one last month for The Times. Presumptuous though it may be to dispute the views of a Nobel Prize winner, I nevertheless believe that as many people as possible should visit the country.

o do the teacher and lawyer I met in Mandalay. The worst times, they told me, were during the years when the generals themselves were deterring tourism by restricting visas. Then, when the country was isolated, the people felt forgotten.

Travel is not simply an economic commodity; some of the worst excesses of tourism have occurred because people have been allowed to think that it is. Still less is it a truncheon with which to rap the knuckles of the regimes we disapprove of, however detestable. Tourism, which ran uninterrupted to Eastern Europe in the 1970s, no more prolonged Soviet communism than it hastened the end of apartheid in South Africa or prevented the massacre in Tiananmen Square.

Tourism is about people as much as it is about politics or the balance of payments; it is one of our freedoms, both mine and the men's I met in Mandalay. To stay away from a country on principle may make you feel better but it may well make the people living there feel worse. • The author was Editor of ITV's Wish You Were Here. . . ? for 20 years.

"Within hours of the first snowflakes falling in the Alps, our phones were ringing off the hooks," says Susi Johnston of Alpine Answers, referring to the big storms in mid-February which saved this snuwstarved season. And Ms Johnston is just one of many ski industry professionals to report an extraordinary sensitivity to snuw reports this winter.

THE Internet is not the only computerbased source of skiing information. Resorts are starting to issue CD-Rom computer guides to ski resorts have appeared, mostly in America. They all have user-friendly databases and video graphics no book can compete with.

Britain's first on-screen ski guide threatens to make the two best-selling books, The Good Skiing Guide and Where to Ski, obsolete. Travelbug Software (01932 224008) offers 190 ski resorts and package holiday prices from 30 tour operators, in full colour, at the

What it lacks are detailed full-colour piste maps to replace the small and poorly printed ones in both best-selling British guidebooks.

Travellers to America should check out Media Odyssey's SKI-CD, a comprehensive travel planner to 450 ski areas in the USA. However, its 800 direct-dial numbers to specific resorts will not work from the UK. Unlike Travelbug, SKI-CD includes sound and video clips as well as piste maps and photographs. # Sailing into a rich man's world bout halfway down the harbour front in Road Town, the capital of the British Virgin Islands, I found the sort of restaurant no resort should be without. This is the Cell Five Lounge, where a notice on the pavement offers the "Best Breakfast in the Caribbean". "Sumptuous Dinners". "Fantastic Drinks", "Great Lun-ches" and a "Steel Band" every Thursday.

This immodest selection might pull in the crowds but the best bit comes at the bottom, where guests are warned: "Sorry, we do not cater for people in a hurry." At last, the place I have been looking for all my life . . . a slow food joint. Those who fancy a holiday where the pace of life is gentle need look no further.

The same might be said of the entire BVIs, an attractive litter of islands off the eastern coast of Puerto Rico - but you have to be selective. To stay on one island might not fill up the week, to dash about the lot would be to miss the whole point of the place. The best plan is to decide what you like doing and visit those islands best suited for that purpose.

The islands are perfect for honeymoons, sailing or just hanging about. That much is obvious on arrival. There is a great deal of swooning going on, the sea is carpeted with yachts and, when it comes to hanging about, the attractions of the BVIs are almost too Caribbean joys of blue seas and sunny skies, these islands offer something that is hard to find — solitude. On a BVI beach, two really is a crowd and these beaches stretch for miles on every island, sandy and safe.

This marvellous absence of crowds is explained by the fact that most visitors either arrive by yacht, stay on a yacht or go yachting. Sailing is one of the main activities. I usually get queasy walking on wet grass but I found myself on the Thalassi, a 90ft schooner which comes complete with a crew in designer T-shirts, tak-ing a day-sail around Tortola for lunch off Sandy Cay.

Another attraction is the food which, if not cheap, is always good and heavy on local seafood. If you like lobster, then dinner at the Suger Mill hotel on Tortola or an alfresco lunch at the Big Bamboo beach café at Loblolly Beach on Anegada Island has to form part of the holiday. Exploring the BVIs is fairly

light aircraft ply between the islands and travelling times are short - just half an hour by sea from Tortola to Virgin Gorda, a 12-minute hop from the Beef Island Airport to the most far-flung island, Anegada. Most of these side trips begin on Tortola, the main island of the group, home to the capital, Road Town, the Sage Mountain National Park - a good place to visit for hill walks and rare

Balmy days: Cane Garden Bay, Tortola, the main island in the group, which is ideal for family groups and those who like a little entertainment

Tortola's other attractions include Bomba's Beach Bar, which keeps erratic hours, the Suger Mill restaurant, a number of small, colourful yachting ports and the local specific. a rum-based drink known as a Painkiller. Tortola is ideal for nightlife, so a couple of days at in the pool or exploring the Long Beach will do for Tortola before moving on to Peter island.

Peter Island is a resort island and a haunt of the jet set, with just one hotel, a few villas and many regular guests. A couple I met in the bar were on their 29th visit. There isn't a lot to do on Peter Island so I spent a day dozing potential of the beach bar. where the arrival of our small party doubled the daily takings. A few days doing nothing on Peter Island was beginning to feel like a very good idea when the Thalassi slid into the marina and took me off to Sandy Cay.

Sailing on a fully catered yacht for a day is a marvellous way to acquire a tan and discover how the rich live. If BVI yachtsmen are anything to go by, they live extremely well. As one retired millionaire remarked on Peter Island: can't buy happiness are shopping at the wrong store." This cruise displayed a good range of islands, green outcrops in a dear blue sea, and the following day took me to Guana.

moon island, very small, quiet and rather wonderful. It has one delightful hilltop hotel, seven empty beaches, flamingoes and pelicans. which plummet into the sea like broken umbrellas. Apart from walking, snorkelling and watching the pelicans, there is not a lot else to do but relax. Getting there from Tortola takes only ten minutes by speedboat but most people who go there never want to

days on one island you want to move to another one, and everyone in the British Virgin Islands insists that visitors go to Anegada.

Anegada is a real coral atoll, flat, arid and typically empty, just three miles wide and only 27ft above sea level, a place for people who like to get away from It all. To get there usually requires a short flight from Tortola because Anegada is fringed with reefs which make sailing there tricky, although they make the snorkelling and bone-fishing superb. To get about you need a mountain beach cafes serving freshly caught lobster, and just one fine hotel, the Anegada Reef Hotel, a centre for expeditions on and off-shore.

The last major island of the group is Virgin Gorda, which does not belong to Richard Branson: he owns Necker Island, a mile or two offshore. Virgin Gorda looks a bit like Cornwall and a bit like the Seychelles, with an old fin mine, lots of splendid beaches and big, smooth rocks. It also has two resorts that make any stay memorable - Biras Creek, a hotel on a hill which looks a bit like a castle, and the larger resort hotel of Bitter End, consisting of cabins set on a hillside above the marina and the central bar and restaurant. It also has easy access to the Pirates Pub on Saba Island, a few hundred yards

Within seconds, the jovial manager of Chilas's finest hotel was at my side, bearing light and comfort. This is nothing." he grinned, his face blue in the meon glow, "During the monsoons the guests were stuck here for a week."

Chilas is a rest stop along the Karakoram Highway and not a place in which to linger. In the Kohistan region forbidding mountains offer sanctuary to all manner of bandits. Each village boasts a "killing tower", the better to take pot shots at enemies. It used to be called Yaghistan -Land of the Ungoverned - and old habits die hard.

Cocooned by Irfan, our guide, and Muzamal, our driver, we marvelled in safety at this primitive otherness. We travelling northeast along the Karakoram Highway to the Khunjerab Pass in an air-conditioned minibus. Twenty years ago, the region was accessible only via perilous jeep tracks.

This stretch of the KKH opened in 1978; 685km of road blasted through the mountains of the Northern Areas of Pakistan at a cost of 800 lives (some sources claim 2,500). Centuries-old graffin carved into the rocks from Gandharan Swat to China mark the progress of Buddhist pilgrims and merchants along this branch of the historic Silk

Today, the journey is still difficult. Muzamal sped through an earthquake zone where the valley narrows to a sheer granite gorge and the Indus sluices 500m below. The view is breathtaking, if heartstopping. Signs warn of landslides, and a little farther on the road has been potted by a rockfall. The Sisyphean task of keeping the KKH in passable shape falls to the Frontier Works Organisation, which logs details of all foreigners braving this route. Naturally, there are no guard rails to thwart the will of Allah.

Then a miracle occurred. We rounded a bend and the claustrophobic pass yielded a speciacular panorama - the junction of the mighty Hindu Raj. Karakoram and Himalayan ranges spread like ramparts across the horizon.

Formerly a collection of princely states, the Northern Areas are in the limbo of dispute - claimed by Kashmir but administered by Islamabad. A babel of tongues can be heard in the tribal hotchporch of the regional capital. Gilgit Town: Shia and Sunni Muslims gather here, with occasionally explosive results. Then, of course, there are the *Someone had better go with you," warned Irfan when I announced a shopping trip to Gilgit. He was taking no chances. It seems the 19thcentury obsession with spies lives on. A burly chaperone was appointed and we set off through the metropolitan shanty of the Cinema Bazaar in search of carpets, jewellery and scarves.

I loved Gilgit, with its buzz intrigue and romance. I loved the oh-so-un British polo matches, virtuoso free-for-alls

A Few Days in Rajasthan

Not everyone wants to go on a whistle-stop tour around India, getting upat dawn, packing and unpacking every day. Nor are some of those people consoled by the beauty of the place when balanced with the discomforts and the lack of facilities in the remoter areas. This tour therefore is designed to be leisurely and comfortable within the context of Indiaandains to explore three major areas in depth, allowing sufficient time for independent sightseeing or simply to relax in the shade of a parden or watching the inimitable

Our itinerary commences with a flight from London Heathrow to Delhi or a two-night stay at the Hotel Kanishka. During our stay visits will be made to both Old and New Delhi and in particular the Red Fort and the Lutyers-designed centre of the city. From Delhi we travel south to Agra. where the route allows a glimpse of the Indian countryside, for a onenight stay in the Ashok Hotel our base or visiting the Taj Mahal.

We continue our exploration of Rajasthan by travelling to Fatelpur Sikri where we make a short visit before proceeding to Jaipur and the Ashok Hotel for a two-night stay. n island with some of the best beaches in the Mediterranear – as well as a wild, mountainous interior, sun-shine from May to October, inexpensive accommodation and good food - ought to be high in the British holiday top ten. Yet Sardinia has few visitors from these islands which, for those British who do go, is part of its charm.

Paradoxically, the money poured into and the publicity generated by the best-known part of the island, the Costa Smeralda, may have de-creased Sardinia's appeal by persuading us it is only for the very wealthy holidaymaker. This part of the northeastern coast, with custom-built villages, marinas and glamorous hotels, can be a very expensive destination. Or it can provide a two-week self-catering holiday for four, flights and car included, for just over £500 a

In July and August, when the mainland Italians arrive, Residenza Capriccioli's 30 single or two-storey houses and tennis court will be considerably busier. The aim of the residenza is to combine the benefits of self-catering and hotel accommodation, an idea which particularly appeals to families; there is a reception office and staff but unless you need their help you will only see them when picking up and dropping off your key. Inside, the houses have white, rough-cast walls, tiled floors, fragrant furniture of local wood, iron bedsteads, efficient bathrooms and kitchens (all have washing machines, some have dish-

For the mountains you will have to travel further, to the province of Nuoro, the heart of the island, also known as Barbagia because the Romans called its vanquished but not subdued citizens "civitates barbariae". This is a region not only of mountains but also barren plains, forests of holm oak, chestmut, hazelnut, holly, oak, juniper, the homeland of shepherds. It is two and a half hours' drive from the Costa Smeralda (there is a slower, prettier route off the motorway) and although Nuoro, the chief town of the area, is described as "a well-known tourist centre", it doesn't feel

H. Lawrence on his journey through Sardinia in 1921 said there was nothing to see in Nuoro and this was a compliment. Even though the town now has a folk museum and has turned the former home of Grazia Deledda, the second woman to win the Nobel Prize for Literature, into a shrine, there is still nothing to do in Nuoro is a hill town beneath Monte Ortobene; the smaller town of Oliena, about 15 minutes' drive away, is overshadowed by Monte Corrasi and, just off the narrow road from Oliena to Dorgali, the Hotel Su Gologone looks out over a plain from the foot of soaring limestone hills. The hotel takes its name from the nearby spring, which feeds its swimming pool, and its threestar comforts make it a good base for exploring the region.

Or you could happily spend a week here enjoying luxury amid bleakly beautiful surroundings. As well as its pool, the hotel offers a very good restaurant, two tennis courts and Land Rover or horseback outings (it has its own stables) into the wilds of Barbargia. Some rooms, which are

races for sunbathing, reading, listening to the bells of the goats as they come down from the hills at dusk. This was once bandit as well as goatherd country, and it may still be. When we arrived the hotel was full of young men in military-style uniform; we were told they were policemen from the mainland, here to investigate the kidnap of a businessman in a nearby town. Not an urgent investigation, apparently, as they spent most of their days around the pool.

A rootle round an ancient county

merged on a stony Rutland Water, looking curiously like a moored ship. I climbed aboard to find that ionnes of concrete have been pumped into the crypt to prevent it from sinking, and that the nave and transept now house the Normanion Church Water Museum. Its purpose: 10 explain all you could ever want to know about turning 3.000 prime agricultural acres into a lake the size of Windermere.

As an engineering project this is a doddle, apparently You simply build a dam and pump water into a valley. But that's reckoning without the impact on the people you intend to flood, especially if they are the middlest of Middle Englanders. The stury gave me olenty to mull over as I strode westwards ong the perimeter cycle and foot path, to begin my ien-mile rooile round Rutland.

It all began in 1974, when Edward Heath's Local Government Act ordered that England's smallest county be swallowed whole by its neighbour, Leicester-shire. The double whammy was com-pleted when, hot on the heels of this affront, came the decision to build the massive "Empingham Reservoir" to supply the burgeoning towns of the East Midlands with water. Two villages (Nether and Middle Hambleton) were to disappear forever,

The cry of the Rutlander was heard not only in Leicester town hall, but in Westminster. Border signs of the colonising county were torn down and Rutland's own defiantly erected, complete with ancient coat of arms and mono proclaiming Multum in Parvo (much in little). Rutland's identity became the symbol of opposition to the reservoir.

They lost the war though battles were won along the way, such as changing the name to Rutland Water. But nowadays, even the most diehard Rutlanders will reluctantly admit that benefits have surfaced out of the destructive waters. The path follows an incontestably beautiful lake, its bays and inlets blending into the hillscape as if it were as old and as natural. And who could begrudge the peaceful anglers hunched over their rods like Jeremy Fishers? Or the windsurfers ripping silently across the surface like brightly-coloured tropical insects?

The village of Edith Weston, once about as far away from watersports as it is possible to get in Britain, is now home to the Rutland Sailing Club. Cleats were clinking on aluminium, in a marina full of dinghies with swaying masts.

Not that Rutland Water is a sporting free-for-all. As part of Anglian Water's policy of "balanced, sustainable tourism" for which it boasts an EU environmental award, motor boats are banned, and sailing is restricted to about half the lake. The rest is for the waterfowl and other birds which dive, wade and nest at the other end of the lake.

The perimeter path took me to the edge of one of these wetland areas, which has been fenced off as Lyndon Nature Reserve. With a daily permit (£1.20, students and children 50p) from the Lyndon Visitor Centre, I was free to wander down soggy. arcane trails, canopied with greenery, to the marshy shore. A wooden hide looked out over this swamp of lagoons and shallows where the River Gwash flows into the reservoir. The peace was broken only by the occasional whirring of wings followed by a screech or a splash.

After losing my way down a dead-end trail and sinking almost up to my knees in squelch, I left the reserve and crossed the lakeside road to take a footpath signposted with an acorn emblem, over the fields to Wing. As the trail crossed the Peterborough to Birmingham railway.

the village of rightly clustered, honey-culoured cottages tupped with Collywesten roof tiles came enchantingly into view. Here was another face of Rutland, which was probably typical of the antediluvian shire — a sleepy village shop and post office, rose-covered contages, and a squat church with a thick, block-like lower.

Wing's particular curiosity is a medieval penitential maze said to be one of only three surviving in England. Carved out of turf, it is rather like a giant version of a child's comic book puzzle. The idea was that sinners could do penance by finding their way, on their knees, in the centre, praying as they went. I thought up a few things to be contrite about leasy enough), and had a go. I can reveal that on your knees, without the bird's eye view you get standing up, it is far more

So, unabsolved, I made my way to the Cuckoo Inn for a pint of Ruddles (brewed in nearby Langham) and met a trio of oldtimer Rutlanders with firm views about county status and the reservoir.

The consensus was something like this: "We'll never forgive the loss of the two villages, though in the end Rutland Water has turned out not too bad. But if it hadn't been for us locals putting the pressure on. it would all have been very different. And Rutland must be officially its own county again." In fact, John Gummer, the Environment Secretary, last week granted Rutland the status of a "unitary authority" from April 1, 1997.

From Wing, another cross-country path to Lyndon passed grand, clock tower-crowned Lyndon Hall and the thanhed cottages of former estate workers, before a long avenue of oaks and ashes led back to the lake. Few places can be quite so redolent of the Middle English squirearchy.

I traced my steps back along the perimeter path to Normanton, pondering on what would have happened had Rutland Water chosen, or been allowed, to host theme parks, water slides and fast food restaurants instead of nature reserves, sailing and hiking trails. Would Rutlanders have come to terms with the course of history so easily?

oin us this springtime for a cruise through the dramatic fjords of Western Norway. You will trayel from your local area to Holl where you will board your floating hotel, M.V. Funchal, for a 10 night scenic idyll. As you sail through the deep waters of the Hardangerfjord.

Romsdalsfjord and the Sognefjord, you will pass snow capped peaks, cascading waterfalls, and pretty villages. A full day will also be spent at Bergen with its colourful harbour and delightful old buildings. M.V. Funchal is rightly known as "The Happiest Ship Afloat" because of the very special atmosphere created on board by the Portuguese crew and Festive's own British staff. At just under 10,000 tonnes and holding around four hundred passengers she offers traditional cruising at its best. Spectacular entertainment, attentive service and mouthwatering cuisine await you on this exceptional cruise.

Prices start at just £499 (after early booking discount) so book early. INCLUDED IN THE PRICE ● 10-ports of call

Cast adrift on treasure islands

The Sevenelles are truly a box of delights. All dra-matically different, even their names are seductive places where anything might happen - Mahé, Silhouette, La Digue, Bird Island Bird Island, Now there is something really special. Half an hour's flight north of Mahe in one of the small, twin-engined planes used for island-hopping in the area, and there it sits. Alone in the brightest blue ocean you have ever seen is a coral island of such perfection that it takes your breath away. The size of Hyde Park, it has a white sand beach all the way round, a lush growth of coconus palms in the centre — and a small grass landing strip for the aircraft.

There are 24 discreetly placed bungalows, each with all mod cons. including king-sized, four-poster beds. Much of the lood in the lodge where you eat is freshly caught fish and, during our stay, one of the guests came back from an early approving fishing trip with a 300lb time marlin. That was the good news. The bad news was that we had to leave before large chunks of it were prepared for a barbecue a couple of nights later.

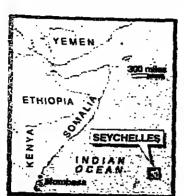

If peace and isolation with the basic comforts of civilisation considerately provided are what you seek, there can be few places to rival this.

There has only been one hiccough in recent times. The children of George and Margaret, the couple who manage the island, were given rabbits as pets. Behaving as they do, the rabbits multiplied alarmingly and began burrowing all over the tiny atoli including the airstrip.

It became so dangerous for the aircraft that, during a closed period on Bird Island, a licensed marksman was brought in and, over a 14day period, he shot more than 500 rabbits. There were no survivors.

And the birds? Oh yes, there are birds. One-and-a-half million sooty terns come to nest between May and October. Throughout the year there are curlew sandpipers, Indian mynahs, Madagascar fodies, plovers, egress and many more. It is also home to an elderly chap rather perversely called Esmeralda - at 200, reputedly the world's oldest

You can base yourself in a smart hotel on, say, the biggest island of Mahe and enjoy the spectacular scenery, the varied beaches and the snorkelling and scuba-diving. But the alternative that we pursued was to stay in smaller guest houses exploring some of the other islands. Which is how I found myself on Silhouette — a 15-minute helicopter flight from Mahé. Silhouette is another treasure from the Seychelles' box of delights. They say that many pirates were buried here and, of course, lots of

Unlike Bird Island, it is mountainous and largely covered with rainforest. There seems to be an almost permanent crown of clouds set on its highest peak. There are no roads, just a few tracks, and it was following one of these through the trees at the back of the coral-encrusted beach that I had a weird experience,

I was suddenly aware that the trees were filled with thousands of sleeping fruit bats. The trouble is that I have been watching too many horror films for, like a vamoire. I was not throwing any shadow on the ground.

All right, the sun is directly overhead on the Equator in the middle of the day, but on the doorposts of the cottages of nearly all the island's 200 inhabitants, they had scrawled JHS - Jisus homme sauveur — a prayer to ward off evil spirits.

La Digue is different again. The fourth-largest of the islands, it has a small network of roads and tracks to get you from one beautiful beach to another by bicycle or ox cart. It was here that they shot part of that fashionable 1970s soft-focus, soft porn film Emmanucile. The large thatched mansion with the broad verandahs where many of the scenes were set is still there — but not open to the public. They don't much talk now about Emmanuelle especially as the President of the Seychelles, Albert René, has occasionally used it as a weekend

You can get to La Digue in half an hour by boat from Praslin (pronounced Prarlin, an island with just a few fishing boats bobbing in its vast natural bay. But it is the second-largest island in the Sey-chelles and, at its heart, is the world heritage site of the Vallée de Mai national park, filled with palms, pines and giant ferns, much of it untouched virgin forest with just a narrow track meandering through.

My visit to the Scychelles finished memorably in great culinary style. Along the way there had been wonderful fish dishes of huge red snapper, marlin, creole dishes of spicy pork, curried chicken and On the last night in Mahé, Alain

Fact file

The author was a guest of the Seychelles Tourist Office and Air Seychelles. ☐ Flights: Air Seychelles (01293 542101) has three flights a week from the UK - two from London Gatwick and one from Manchester. Excursion fares from Gatwick from £850 return to £1,009 in July. August and September: from Manchester, £962 to £1,121. ☐ Accommodation: small hotels and guest-houses can be booked on the phone and fax numbers below. The dialling code from the UK to the Seychelles is 00 248: Mahé: Le Petit Village (247474, fax 247771); Auberge Louise XVII (3444tt, fax 344428): Deniella's Bungalows (247212, fax 247784]. On Praslin: Maison de Palmes (2334tt, lax 233880). ☐ tsland-hopping: we visited Silhouette (flying by Helicopter Seychelies. which is also available for inter-island transfers and sightseeing excursions), and Bird Island, flying on Air Seychelles' inter-island service. Each island has a small lodge. Silhouette (344154, fax 344178). Bird Island (224925, fax 225074) We also visited La Digue by ferry from Praslin (£2.50) for a day trip, hiring bicycles for about £3 a day. ☐ Tour operators: many UK operators feature small guest-houses: for example, a 12-night Island-hopping holiday combining Mahé and Praslin starts from around £1,037 per person with Airwaves (0181-875 1188). Other good operators for small hotels include Silk Cut Travel (01730 265211) and Elite Vacations (0181-423 3131). ☐ Weather: warm and stable all year, with temperatures in the high 70Fs and 80Fs. Heavy rain November to February. ☐ No inoculations are necessary. The Seychelles are malaria-free.

WEEKEND SATURDAY MARCH 23 1996

by Raymond Keene

TtHS weekend marks the 50th 23 Rbd1 e4 anniversary of the death of the 25 Qb4 as world champion and supreme attacker Alexander Alekhine. His games have proved an inspiration for generations of grandmasters. He is the particular here of Garry Rasparow, "I fell in love with the rich complexity of his ideas at the chessboard. he once said. "Alckhine's anacks came suddenly. like destructive thunderstorms that erupted frunt a clear sky."

This game from the 1937 world championship, in which Alekhine regained the title from Max Euwe, hows Atchine's tempestuous siyle. Alekhine's queenside pawn structure is broken up, but in com-pensation he has the bishop pair. It s fascinating to see how he launches a series of thunderbolts in deflect Black's attention from his own printe target on the queen's flank. To start comes a typical Alekhine shock, placing a bishop on a square where it can be captured.

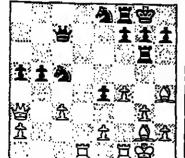

White: Alekhine: Black: Euwe World Championship, 1937 Catalan Opening

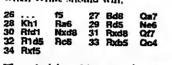

16 Bh6!! Black cannot capture, since 16 . . . gxh6 17 Qxf6 leaves Black's position shanered. Similarly the defence 16 . . . Nfd5 17 Be4 96 18 Of3 Rfd8 19 Rad1 leaves Black tied in knots.

16 ... Nbd7 17 Qg5 Ne8

After 18... Nb6, Alekhine planned a typical sacrifice to retain the gxh6 21 a5 Qd7 22 Qh5.

By a constant stream of factics, Alekhine has prevented Edwe from co-ordinating his forces for a direct anack on White's broken queenside pawns. The critical move now is 26 . Rd6, but then comes the amazing 27 Be7 Rxdl (not 27 ... Qxe7 28 Qxe5) 28 Bxe5 Rxfl+ 29 Rxfl b4 30 cxb4 Ndo 31 Qxa5 Qxa5 32 bxa5, when White should win.

The decisive blow, and again typical Alekhine. Black has never been able to string together a cohesive plan given the countless pin-pricks to which Alekhine has subjected him, If Black now takes the rook with 34 ... Rxf5 then 35 Rxe8+ Kf7 36 Qe7+ Kgt 37 Bxe4 when Black's situation is hopeless.

This wins easily enough but 36 Qb3

Black resigns

Anyone interested in Alekhine may like to know that his best games have been reissued in algebraic notation, with revised notes by John Nunn (Batsford, £17.99).

WINNING MOVE

By Raymond Keene This position is from the game Jelen - Tkachiev, Cannes 1996. Although Black has a strong initialive on the kingside, White appears, for the moment at least, to have kept him at bay. Can you spot the clever Black continuation which proved that this is not the case? Black to play.

Send your answers on a postcard to The Times, I Pennington Street. London El 9XN. The first three correct answers drawn un Thursday will win a Brinish Chess Magazine publication. The answer will be published next Saturday.

Last week's winners: M Kaye Chaminster, Dorchester, J Stevens, Southville, Bristol; H Mc-

Contract 4NT by South Lead nine of clubs

After winning the opening lead with the queen of clubs South (the visitor) played on diamonds. East took the second round and played a hean. At this point it was clear that East had KJIO of clubs and the ace of diamonds, so West was marked with the ace of spades and king and jack of hearts. All South had to dn was play the ten of hearts on East's heari return and he would have been in control.

However, the visitor took his eye off the ball - thinking he had a safe ien tricks by clearing the spades, he won with the ace of hearts. He then led a spade to the ien and cashed the queen of diamonds. Too late he realised he had no safe discard. To keep his heart guard he had to continued spades West (Zia Mahmood) took the ace and led one back. Thus South had to lose the last two heart tricks. "Suicide squeeze" remarked Zia On the second hand, Zia was North and the visitor East.

throw a spade, and when he

North opened One Club and continued with Two Diamonds over South's One Heart. The resulting 3NT contract appears to have nine top tricks and only four

West staned with the king of diamonds and switched to the six of hearts. East tried winning with the ace and returning a low heart. hoping to find his partner with Jxx. That let declarer home.

The correct defence would have been a good counter to Zia's comment about the first hand. East should cash a second high heart. What is dummy to discard? If he keeps Qx of diamonds, a winner must be thrown, and now East exits with the eight of clubs, forcing dummy to give West the last twn tricks in diamonds.

COMPUTER GAMES AND PASTIMES

WE KICK off with the slickest international football game in town. Actua Soccer, which is now out for the PlayStation. Thanks to the witty addition of good running commentary from Barry Davies, this game leaps from the screen with mesmerising depth and playability.

You can opt to play the national team of any of 44 countries and switch tactics and styles to your liking. Actua Soccer is a bench-mark title and it's the audio action that makes for such engrossing entertainment. Only one or two can play but bystanders will find themselves quickly: drawn in. The crowd-pulling action of motor racing is less scintillating in FI Challenge, a one-player, Formula One racing game for the Sega Sat-urn. The graphics are pleasant enough but the action and engine sounds are wimpy. The only new twist is the chance to call into the pits for tyre-swaps and servicing during marathon races; and the most tired trick is an inane music score which elevates elevator Muzak to classical status. Equally uninspiring, and also for the Saturn, is Off-World Inter-ceptor Extreme. Throwing you behind the wheel in rough terrain, the armed vehicle bangs about every which way but loose. The design of the game also feels rough and ready.

Returning to the international circuit, learning a language has never been easier with some of the latest software. Trying to master another tongue by using language labs was never very satisfactory but, two decades later, similar ideas work much better on home

Many titles include voice-recognition software, allowing you to hear and then accurately repeat words and sentences. From Vektor Multimedia, the At Home series on CD-Rom provides a fundamenstructured learning approach in French, German and Spanish "in-line with the UK National Curriculum". Icon-led, the title has a formal feel as it teaches essentials such as the alphabet, numbers currency and times as well as phrases and a little interactive The Multimedia Language System from Infogrames also focuses on French, German or Spanish and comes with a microphone. By contrast, these boast a "no-lessonsinvolved", more colourful ap-

From Accent Software International, the sophisticated Accent Duo range allows you to type in one language and see it automatically translated into a second. Of course there are a few quirky slip-ups, for example when translating Spanish to English the line "Hello, young lovers" becomes Hello, juvenile lovers".

Accent Duo titles are available for English to French, German, Italian and Spanish on CD-Rom as well as floppy disk for easy laptop loading. Each includes a mulfilingual word-processor supporting several other languages as well as spell-checking, thesaurus and hyphenation. Text for translation can also be imported from external documents. Cyberspace Veinnidos. That is, this is the last call for Cyberspace Twenty-Two. The competition closes at midnight on Tuesday March 26, and to enter you must write a treatment for a suitable new movie to be made by Ken Russell. Your ideas will probably be far-fetched. Three lucky readers will each win Logitech scanners. First prize is a top-of-the-range Page-Scan Color, a self-feeding A4 scanner. Second and third prizes are ScanMan Color and ScanMan 256 hand-held scanners. Each comes with editing software. Entries must be between 150 and 250 words, include your name, age, address and home telephone number and be sent to: Cyberspace Twenty-Two, Computer Games, Weekend, The Times, I Pennington Street, London El 9XN. You may also fax entries to us on 0171-729 6791. The judges will not enter into addicional correspondence.

Obsessed with Britain's classic system

It is more than a passion; it is a £lbn a year industry that earns millions in export sales

ing to step too close to gleaming machines. Others cannot get close enough; heads disappear beneath bonnets, into boots and one man wriggles along the floor and crawls underneath. A classic car is guaranteed to produce a strong reaction in the British public

gance or race meeting.

But historic vehicles now represent far more than nostalgia, family fun, the anoraks' delight or enthusiasts' thrills. This national passion has spawned an industry that has weathered recession as well as any and on which business worth El billion and exports worth millions depend.

oday, at the Heritage Warwickshii of one of Britain's finest collections of automobiles, the great and the good of the classic car movement will discuss not just chrome, polish and restoration but cash, policy and preservation. The business is important enough to influence government policy and attract big money from major manufacturers. But just what is it worth?

Putting a value on Britain's classic car business is not easy: for a successful industry it must be one of the most fragmented, ranging from the inand dealers in cars that may be worth £1 million each to suppliers of spares and backstreet boffins who specialise in turning the perfect valve maybe 5,000 companies in all. its political lobby secured exemption from road tax for 25-year-old cars. Robert Brooks, head of Britain's leading classic car auction house, says that the UK auction market is worth about £50 million a year, with dealer and private sales probably worth four times as much. Add in restoration, spares, insurance, the wages of the thousands employed in the business, the funding of museums and the administration and sponsorship of events ranging from club meetings to next year's British-organised Peking to Paris centenary run and the El billion looks realistic. Perhaps a quarter of that represents export business. Brooks holds auctions in Monte Carlo, France and Australia as well as Britain, and on April 20 launches a joint venture in Germany with a sale at the Mercedes-Benz museum in Stuttgart.

Mechanical boom: a visitor to London's Alexandra Palace shows classic enthusiasm for a business that influences government policy, attracts big money from major manufacturers and employs thousands of people The big carmakers are rapidly realising the importance of the classic movement. Keynote speaker at Gaydon will be Nick Scheele, chairman and chief executive of Jaguar, fresh from introducing, at the Geneva Motor Show, the longawaited XK8, the result of a massive investment by the company's multi-national parent. Ford. Yet however much is invested in advertising this state-of-the-art sports car, thanks to the fervour of those who bear the flame for classics it will never escape the tag "spiritual successor to the E-

Lord Montagu of Beaulieu. president of the FBHVC, who will open the conference, is quick to point out that the preservation movement began in Britain 70 years ago. The implications of the business are now enormous. Apart from the sales and spares, there are events worldwide, autojumbles, auctions and it generates huge numbers of books and magazines. I did the first Jaguar book in the 1960s: there are now more than 300 on that make alone.

proposed this conference because of the big changes in the movement. When I started the National Motor Museum in 1952, the emphasis was on veteran cars, now the road cars of that era — the Zephyrs and Zodiacs — are regarded as classics in their own right. More and more people want to that raises big issues such as road tax, environmental legislation and ethical problems such as when a restoration turns a car into a fake,"

Born in Coventry, died in . . . where?

WHEN the candles go out on the motor industry's centenary birthday cake, spare a thought for the hapless executives of the Couder motor company. Their ambition would have been to have their car a proud part of the celebrations - but the company failed to make it into the industry's history book, except as a bizarre footnote. For Couder is one of the legion of motor companies that started with bright hopes only to fall apart almost as soon as they began. Over the past century, 132 carmakers set up in Coventry; today there are just two major ones left in the form of Peugeot and Jaguar. And a study by Paul Collins and Michael Stratton shows graphically just how high the attrition rate has been down the years among carmakers for whom survival was a bigger issue than glory.

Coventry City officials have

combed the record books, museums and enthusiasts' clubs, but can find only 40 surviving cars of the 132 marques that have come and gone from the city.

Even among the survivors. there is sometimes only a lone car as the metal memorial to the hopes and efforts of the industry's pioneers. Today, Car 96 starts a quest to find the missing links — cars hidden in barns, at the back of museums or hidden under dusty sheets deep in a dark garage — so that they can take their place in Coventry's tribute to 100 years of car manufacturing in the city.

Our readers might know the location of cars from Arno. Acme and Albatros or Awson, Daisy, Dutson, Cluley, Emms, Gravenor, Hamilton, Priory,

The list of Coventry's carmakers is a long and strange roll call of births, deaths and marriages over 100 years.

The questions it poses though is: what happened to all those carmakers and their cars? Some were bought out by the industry's Big Brothers, their names and technology absorbed to such an extent that few people know those fledgling companies even exstood a chance, perhaps capitalised - or were just incompetent, their cars so deeply flawed that even a novice public knowing little of new-fangled automobiles saw the potential for trouble. for example? Records show that the company set up in Lythalls Lane in Coventry in 1923. And then they weren't there any more; they simply ceased to exist sometime that same year. Nobody seems ever to have seen a Couder car, let alone ridden in one. Even Coventry's Museum of British Road Transport, which has a wide selection of Coventry-made models, is baffled after months of searching for the missing pieces in its jigsaw of the city's motoring history. Yet somebody must have clues as to where the missing models are. Coventry was Britain's

NEWS IN BRIEF

Tyres at risk

HALF the cars on Britain's roads are running on tyres with illegal tread, according to the Narional Tyres Distributors Association. The association's members inspected more than 300,000 tyres and discovered 48 per cent did not meet the legal minimum of 1.6 millimetres of tread depth. Alarmingly, 17 per cent of those tyres were also severely damaged in a way which could lead to blowouts. Richard Edy, the association's director, says: "The survey confirms fears that motorists still fail to regard tyres as safety critical components."

In the wee small hours

THINKING of a new insurance policy? When exactly? If you live in Essex, apparently you are likely to ring for a quote as late as 2am, according to PremiumSearch. The direct insurer runs 24hour telephone lines and claims that motorists in Essex are the latest to call, followed by drivers in Hertfordshire and the Midlands, who are also 'night owls'. Drivers in Northamptonshire are the earliest risers, accounting for 14 per cent of calls from 6am, followed by Yorkshire and Lancashire.

Strictly for the girls

A TRIUMPH no duubt for the market researchers, but what are we to make nt surveys that show lesbians are four times more likely to choose a Subaru? According to Automotive News in the US, the Japanese company is now targeting lesbians, running adds which endearingly say: "It loves camping, dogs and long-term commitment. Too bad it's only a car." Aaah.

They have a suggestion

CLEVER workers at Rover have won $850,000 in the company suggestions scheme - which saved the business more than £6 million last year. The company has twigged to the fact the workers knew best how assembly lines run and now offers prizes worth up to $5,000 and a car for the best money-saving on. Of more than 21,000 suggestions. 4,000 were an! are now operating.

These are clear signs of madness

Eason appeared on the Today programme on Monday talking about sponsored signposts, I assumed I was having a bad dream and went back to sleep. Only later did Kevin's story in The Times confirm that the world had indeed gone mad.

The great thing about what passes for real life in Whitehall is that you could not make it up. If you were to stumble around a saloon bar telling people that the Minister of State at the Department of Transport, as his contribution to helping drivers to concentrate, proposed to put adverts on signposts you would be chucked out for behaviour likely to lead to a breach of the peace.

John Watts, the said minister. apparently believes that sponsored signposts are the answer to a shortfall" in the DoT's budget. We shall leave aside the fact that motorists give the Government E25 billion a year and get £5 billion spent in return — the sort of shortfall" my bank account could do with - and pass quickly on.

Peter Barnard

Of course there is nothing wrong with the principle of signposts that advertise products. This has been going on for centuries. I expect stagecoach drivers once raised their spirits by discovering that they were fast approaching Bournville or Cheddar without feeling the urgent need for a bar of chocolate or a lump

But I would have thought there was a large step to be taken between that and the deliberate carrying of advertising on, say, the signpost to Aldermaston, incidentally, would this desirable location be sold to British Nuclear Fuels or CND?

My eldest daughter, who lives at Benson in Oxfordshire, has already called to express her relief that the next village is not called Hedges. However she is not far from Newbury, whose signposts will soon be the subject of a bidding war between Friends of the Earth and Tarmac, My parents, who live in Plymouth, do not much look forward to being guided homeward by a giant bottle of gin.

in case anyone thinks that the Wans initiaove is some spur of the moment thing, this is far from the case. Mr Watts has clearly thought it through ... or halfway through. He has swept aside the objections of the AA, for example, like a joyrider flamening a bollard.

The AA mildly ventured the thought that drivers might be "distracted" by sponsorship messages as they peered through rain, fog and other manifestations of the British climete in search of the road to Warford. Distracted! What a bunch of wimps!

"This would be a way of applying the Private Finance Initiative for the benefit of motorists." sayeth Mr Watts. "Road signs could be better constructed with the aid of private sponsorship."

Oh, I see. Or rather, no I don't see. This statement is twaddle. What it means is: hello, here's e way of making some money. How in the name of sanity could a road sign be better constructed by having a sponsor? I have been saying for months that the Department of Transport ought to be closed down because it has no sensible role: Mr Watts has proved I am right.

Unfortunately, it appears that this daft scheme will not quickly go away, for Mr Watts promises us "primary legislation". A whole Bill, in other words, to enable signposts to be duttered up with advertising slogans. As I said, you could oot make it up - pure Watts in Wonderland, sponsored by Walt Disney.

Still, I cannot hang about talking to you lot much longer, as I have to rush off up the A67 to affix this column's logo to a signpost: Barnard Castle, one mile. Driven to Distraction could hardly be a more appro-

Messing about in quotes

do they? Sue Baker investigates hen direct insurance arrived, it offered two things: all you needed to do was pick up a phone and premiums would be lower. The latter appears to be something of a lottery, and may depend on when you make your call and who answers as you shop around. A survey of more than 20 car insurers for Car 96 has revealed not only wide gaps between quotes, but also surprising discrepancies between premiums offered by the same company at different times. We sought quotes for three car owners: a young bachelor male with a BMW, a thirtysomething woman with a family Ford, and a middleaged, man, with a sporty Rover, For each quote we rang the same companies twice, giving identical details

each time, but using a different name on the second call. In some cases quotes differed by only just a few pounds, but in others it was by £40 or more, and one quote changed by more than £300. The first driver for whom we sought cover is a 21-year-old office worker from Grays in Essex. He has held a licence for three years, has two years' no claims discount and drives an eight-year-old, E-registration BMW 316 worth about £3,800. It has an immobiliser. and is left parked overnight

More than half the companies declined to quote, and only 11 of those surveyed were prepared to offer him insurance. A day later, he rang them all again. This rime only 10 would give him a quote and one company, which had done so a day earlier now declined. Of the others, only two quoted the same premium and excess as before. Three gave the same quote with a different excess. One increased the premium by 30p, but reduced the excess by £25. Three companies gave a higher quote the second time; one was now lower.

There was also a vast guif between the highest and lowest quotes. The cheapest premium he was offered, by Norwich Union Direct, was £607. The dearest, quoted by Help fnsurance, was £1.227.

Drices for new cars, like the car themselves, will shrink over the next 10 years as motor manufacturers sell them for less than the vehicles they will replace.

The Japanese call it 'price destruction", and Ian McAllister, Ford of Britain's chairman, believes that the trend is catching on here as carmakers fight to maintain or expand their share of a new car market that is likely to stay frozen at loday's 2 million cars a year for the foreseeable future.

The move to lower prices has also been driven by growing pressure from motorists, who are simply refusing lo pay for new cars. Increasingly they are buying nearly-new vehicles that have been used for four, five or six mooths on a daily rental fleet. These cars come to the used market in immaculate condition. covered by manufacturer's warranty, and are on average E3,000 cheaper than the vehicle would cost new.

In response, Mitsubishi has announced the launch of its new Colt. priced from £9,799. which is £120 less than the motorists has had il for two. Vaughan Freeman explains why motoring Klondike at the turn of the century, companies sprouting up in every street to strike the gold of designing a car that would become world renowned. But companies waxed and waned, struggling against the problems of develuping new cars at huge cost against competition from big

Harry J. Lawson was the father of the motor industry in Covenity, incorporating his Daimler Motor Syndicate in 1896. But he was simply the first to the lawyer's office because engineers were hammering and welding cars together before then, employing the skills of the city's bicycle and sewing machine makers. A year before, Frederick Lanchester had made a car in Birmingham, while, in the same city, a young man working as general manager of the Wolseley Sheep Shearing Company had made a threewheeled car: his name was Herben Austin.

ut Coventry was a natural location for the birth of the British motor car: the city had companies with workers used to machine tools and "metal bashing" and there were dozens of businesses looking for opportunities to make products that would get them out of the slump in bicycle manufacturing.

Unfortunately, most cars on sale had to be imported because Lawson had a lock on patents for the Benz engine which stilled development until the courts released his control in 1901. That was the signal for an explosion of carmaking: within five years there were 50 registered carmakers in Britain, most extending established businesses involved in marine engineering, cycle-making and horse-drawn carriages. By 1911, Coventry was employing 6.838 workers in the car industry, turning out 9,000 vehicles a year. By 1921, the employment figure was up to almost 18,700 and growing as carmaking flourished.

ompanies such as Clark Cluley, a business founded in 1890 as textile machinists but which was soon fostering ambitions to join the motorir revolution, entered the fray. The company made bicycles and a tri-car, called the Globe Cymocar, but in 1922 decided to make the real thing, launching the Cluley Light Car and following up with a six-cylin-der model. The experiment lasted only six years though the Cluley dying out as quickly as it was founded, the cars lost for generations to come. - the son of model Car 96 wants to

Even companies which managed to become established produced models that seem to have disappeared forever. When Henry Segrave was the 1920s equivalent of Damon Hill, he gave his name to Hillman's Straight 8 Segrave Model. Hillman formed by William Hillman. once a manufacturer of hikes and roller skates - went on to be absorbed by the Rootes Group and then Chrysler, and the Segrave car has never been traced, making it another we want to find. Lea-Francis was formed in 1895, but did not start making cars until the 1920s, finding success with its sports models, including the Hyper, one of which won the 1928 Ulster TT driven by Kaye Don. But Lea-Francis was beset by financial problems, finally expiring in 1954. The company name has

A Hillman Straight 8 Segrave, named after the legendary racing driver of the 1920s, has never been traced since the original company was taken over

Founded in 1895, Lea-Francis was a more successful survivor, lasting as a carmaker from 1920 to 1954. Its Hyper model was the peak of its achievements been revived twice since, but that Hyper model probably represents the zenith of the company's efforts and a car which would find a fitting place in our investigations. John Horion, one of the team organising Coventry's summer celebrations, says. "Some of these models just seemed to vanish off the face of the earth. It is fascinating that there have been as many as 132 companies operating in and around Coventry over the past 100 years. They were obviously businesses that would be a wonderful addition planned to make cars and become successful manufacturers, but so many were here one day and gone the next.

to our heritage and our cente-nary celebrations." So the quest has started to find the cars of Coventry's yesteryear, the most obscure and rare models that flickered briefly into brilliant life only to be killed off by the harshness of economic life or the vagaries of public taste. Somewhere out there are cars with the most unlikely names. But if you know where they are, join the Car 96 quest to find a lost

ONE OF the staples of the classic car market is the "harn find" — the rare or historic car tucked away when it was replaced ur left

when an owner died. "You might have thought that anyone who owned a barn would have gone and combed it for the last wheel nut when prices were so high in the 1980s, yet still amazing things turn up. says Robert Brooks, Britain's leading classic car auctioneer. These vehicles often neglected for decades and sometimes no more than a box of bits don't sell for the highest prices but and offer extraordinary opportunities to restorers. A Brooks sale

the £6,000-£8,000 estimate. There is also a 1929 Belgian-built Minerva dismantled after being rescued from a scrapyard 30 years ago minus its bodywork and has since been stored but not restored. Its estimate is £2,000-£4,000. A sadly neglected Bristol 403 is also offered as a restoration project at £1.500-£2,000. At the other end of the scale are two perfectlypreserved veterans: a 1902 Glasgow-built Arrol-Johnston six-seater Dog Cart (£30,000-£40,000) and a 1901 De Dion-engined four seater (£20,000-£25,000). Although the car's history is known since 1907, its maker remains a mystery.

THE CAR that Hugo Spowers and his specialists at Prowess Racing have just renovated hardly reflects the finest hour of the British motor industry. But it is a brilliant example of how the classic car business can produce something bet-

The 1969 Jaguar Mk X 420G was built when the car industry here was renowned more for strikes than for technology or build quality. The restored version will be driven by Takehiko Abe. a Japanese cosmetics tycoon, after a year-long £90,000 rebuild. li is an original limousine with the retro looks sought after in Japan, 1990s build quality and brakes and suspension a lot better than the originals.

What Prowess has done is virtually to reconstruct the car from the interior of its steel chassis to the last dot of chrome on the headlamps. "Our client wanted a Mk X that he could drive regularly. Although this one had undergone a cosmetic restoration and had chassis problems, it was complete with original fit-

including 750 hours of restructuring, carried out by Allen Corcoran, a cheerful Australian with a passion for welding. "The quality of the original restoration work wasn't bad, but a lot of rust had been covered up with mastic. Plates had been welded in with lap joints which allow condensation. I've welded everything with joints butting up against the original, allowing no room for condensation and painted inside the main box sections to seal the seams." he says. The Prowess team work on two or three cars at a time io a small workshop tucked away in the leafy bit of Surrey. "We've spent £17.000 working on the engine of this car. We can make minor parts ourselves and if we need anything bigger there are a loi of small engineering places with spare capacity. Only things like major electrical work need a contractor." says Spowers.

The way we've restored this car it will last another 20 years without major work and probably hold its value. You could buy a new Mercedes for the same price, but think of the deprectation."

Tom Merrin hears the story of a Panhard et Lavassor with a unique history

l dward Jarvis, bicycle maker to the gentry, was impressed by the car driven by one his customers who arrived at his shop in 1899. The customer was Charles Rolls, later to be the partner of Henry Royce; the car was a Panhard et Lavassor.

So Jarvis bought one for £750 (the equivalent of El35,000 today) - and started a story that is probably unique in the history of motoring. Nearly a century later, the black, red and gold car is still running — and is still in the same family.

As its equipment does not include a mileometer, it is impossible to say how far the Victorian wagonette has travelled, but it is now kept in Colin Gibbins's garage — and still makes the occasional run out, although it can show the

Buffing up the brasswork on the gleaming vehicle, retired engineer Colin filled in the details of the story.

Panhard and his partner. Levassor, had been in business for about two or three years when Edward Jarvis first saw her at his business in London's Edgware Road.

"She ubviously impressed the old man, because he ordered one from France. All he got was the chassis, axles, wheels and engine, so that part of the car is French. The car around London, and once took it on what was then a highly adventurous 24-hour marathon. On his death, it passed to Edward junior, but he never shared his father's enthusiasm and hardly drove it. It was laid up, moving parts well greased, solid rubber tyres removed, and for 23 years stayed, unused, in a

London to Brighton run. Since then, it has taken part in more than 25 of the famous rallies. In 1938, Edward junior gave the car to his son, John, and for more than half a century John and his wife, Enid, took it on veteran rallies and family peared into oblivion, but if we

"Despite its age, we regular-ly went for drives in it," Enid recalled. "In the early days, most people didn't have cars and it was quite an event to go for a spin."

The fame of the car grew in proportion to its age and one of the highspots of its long life was when it appeared in the 1953 film Genevieve.

John Jarvis, now 84, gave up driving and maintaining the car three years ago and handed it over to his brother-in-law, Colin, 70. who carries on the family tradition of caring for it in a garage shared with three vintage Rolls-Royces at his home in West Wittering, Sussex. John lives just 50 yards away in the quiet seaside close and makes regular visits to n and to be taken for drives.

"John and Mary have no children, and when he passed the car on to me it meant it was staying in the family." said Colin. "I can't see it ever leaving us now. I have three sons - all of them in their forties - and they're all in love

"Everything about this old lady is original. She has wooden wheels and the body is all wood as well. The insurance cover limits me to driving only 500 miles a year, so the tyres are good for a while yet and I have a spare set."

The eight-horsepower engine drives two hefty chains which turn the rear wheels and, flat out, the old car can touch 36mph, three times the speed limit when it was built. "She has four forward and four reverse gears, but the only instrument on her is a water pressure gauge," said Colin. "It's no good even guessing how far she has travelled in nearly 100 years. There's no mileometer, so we'll

"But what we do know is that she is nne of the 20 or so oldest cars in the world that are still runnning."

and the oldest part," And, like a very elderly maiden aunt, the old car has its own quirks. When Colin and his wife. Mary, struggled with a heavy starting handle and timing gear to start the engine for a run round the block, she simply refused to perform. She's having one of her off days." Colin explained. "But at her age you obviously can't expect perfect behaviour all ngineers at Ford will next week strip their a troublesome CVT gearbox to find out what went wrong. But within minutes of arriving at their garage in Brentford, west London, they were already speculating that the internal belt had snapped. writes Kevin Eason.

work, in effect, by eliminating the dutch, automatically reading the car's speed and changing up and down for the driver. But automatics can be slow to "kick down" when overtaking, tend to be more fuel-thirsty than manuals and slower to accelerate. Engineers claim that the new generation of continuous variable transmissions have uvercome those faults. Most people remember CVT technology from the long-gone Daf Variomatic, which was ponderous in the extreme, a push on the throttle pedal met only with a rush of engine revs while the gearbox steeled itself for action. That was because the CVT system works through a series of pulleys and a drive belt which remains the same length whatever the power, so that engine torque — or pulling power — remains constant. A push on the throttle releases

though the technology has been radically altered so that response to the throttle is now immediate. Engine noise does not get louder either, because there is no downshift from the gearbox, the only difference in sounds being a high-pitched, though not intrusive whine.

ord is not the only company on the CVT bandwagon; Rover's only automatic in its new 200 range is CVT, and excellent it is too. Rover claims its 200 CVT will run at 70mph at just 2,700 rpm — slightly below the Escort — while economy figures are virtually the same as for a five-speed manual. There is also no loss of performance, with 0-60mph coming in 9.8 seconds (9.3 for the 1.6 manual), while top speed is 115mph (118mph). suring drivers that something new is good. Early CVT cars certainly seem to have suf-fered reliability problems and are perhaps best avoided on the used car forecourts.

But more recent models feel sharper and should be more responsive, putting drivers at ease with a package so radi-cally different. In any event, look for signs of the car creeping forward too quickly and listen for any unpleasant "thunks" when the gearbox is engaged from neutral.

Total failure, complete success

were banling our way through Tosca when we were rudely interrupted by a loud bang certainly not in Puccini's score. Confirmation that my hearing was not being assaulted by an errant bass drummer came when my Ford Escort almost stood on its nose and the engine revved at such a rate that the racket drowned out a full orchestra at top volume.

Mild surprise turned into full-blown panic when I realised the Escort had lost all forward momentum, the automatic gearbox had clearly shattered and the inner workings of the car were dismantling themselves at speed in the outside lane of the MI. There was a large Volvo breathing down my tailpipe and two cars on my inside as the Escort slowed from 70mph to walking speed in a few seconds. Fortunately, the plume of smoke from under the car must have alerted them to the fact that I was struggling and they weaved out of the way so that I could guide the car to the hard shoulder. There I surveyed the trail of oil into the distance while the Escort stood forlorn, with a quiet hiss depositing the rest of its gearbox oil gently on the tarmac in a purple puddle, At Scratchwood Services as the car was lifted on to a trailer to be returned to Ford - f called Bob Wright, the company's man in charge of the press car fleet. I think the blood drained from his face when I told him what had happened, for a shattered car with just 3,000 miles on the clock is not the best advertisement for Ford's new protege.

Yet the blow-up seemed such a shame because, up to that point, I was pretty impressed with the Escort with its continuous variable transmission. known as CVT or CTX to Ford, that had so conspicuously let me down. Ford is among a series of manufacturers pushing CVT transmissions as the latest gizmo of the future: an automatic gearbox with no steps up and down, just a continuous band of power. Trouble was that my gearbox ended up being all bang and no

however. I was mightily impressed, so much so, dear Reader, that I want you to put down that teacup and take a few minutes to put all thoughts from your mind, forget your preconceptions and relax, for I am going to tell you something you probably would not expect the Ford

Yes, I know all that talk in the magazines about the Escort being boring, mass-produced old rubbish and yes. there was that bit earlier in this account about the gearbox going up in a puff of smoke. Hardly encouraging. I admit. But honest-It may have ly, the Escort has a the best lot going for it, and if that CVT gearbox interior really is reliable -and my experience in its is just a one-off then it is a terrifisegment cally well-packaged town car.

After being Britain's top-selling model for a decade, the Escort was revamped to a chorus of yawns from the critics, so dreary were its driving characteristics, so lacklustre its looks.

The car always sells well because Ford has the muscle to discount it into company fleets and hire businesses. But private buyers would probably be surprised by the car in its latest incarnation. It looks bright enough, if not outstand-ing, but probably has the best interior in its segment; the switchgear and overall feel of the cabin welcoming and Then there are the bits and pieces that separate Escort from the rest of the pack, such as the classy stereo, which I was enjoying - I'm not sure about Kiri - at the time of my gearbox crisis, and compre-hensive anti-theft and security package. Ride and handling have also been improved hugely from the dull as dishwater response and stodgy suspension of the past. Escort is still not class leader in that department, but for the type and length of driving done by most motorists in this country who do not, on the whole

But that CVT provides plenty of fascination, particularly for motorists who do most of their driving around town. You simply push the gearstick into Drive and off you go. Although Ford figures show the automatic to be a bit slower off the mark than the manual 1.6-litre (14 seconds to 60mph compared with 11.6), there is no feeling of lag in acceleration, just a smooth takeoff. It takes only a few hours to get over the idea that there should be the customary jerk of changing gears from the transmission, although it seemed to me like blessed release from the curse of the

However, there is apparent ly only one other trick to full enjoyment of the Escort's continuous variable transmission - and that is to keep it going

Employees who wreck the company finances

Memo to fleet manager: Here's a way to save a fortune by teaching our people to drive

YOU ARE in your office, idly looking out at the car park full of shiny cars all belonging to employees. Along comes a vandal clutching a baseball bat and, without a second thought, he's smashing windows, headlamps and panels. writes Kevin Eason.

It's an horrific prospect, yet thousands of cars are damaged that recklessly in company fleets - wrecked by employees too incompetent at the wheel or too cavalier to care what it costs.

That is why we are launching The Times-Lease Plan Company Car Driver of the Year Compedition, our quest for the best men and women who drive vehicles that belong to businesses, hospitals, surgeries, fire services - anyone who spends all or part of their working day at the wheel.

The six regional finals are not only a serious test of skill, comprising judgment exami-nations, questions on the Highway Code and a session at the wheel of a new Nissan Almera 1.6 on the road, they are also fun for drivers who want to improve.

The best go to the final at Silverstone, where the Silverstone Driving Centre — the school run by former Formula One ace, John Watson - will put competitors through a series of high-speed challenges. And there is the bonus of a terrific prize for the eventual winner the compention in the form of a touring holiday for two in Europe, in a

In fact, only 44 per cent of big companies with more than 5,000 employees have offered training, and even among those, it has reached only an average 22 per cent of the workforce. The figures plum-met the smaller the business: only 19 per cent of companies with 1,000 to 5,000 employees offer training, 10 per cent of those with 50 to 250 people and

4 per cent of businesses with fewer than 50 people. There is a direct impact on costs here which companies are not tackling and which they could easily do something towards," adds Daemi. # Win £10,000 playing F1 Fantasy Drive on formula one racing? Do you think you can predict the result of this year's grand prix series? Then why not play our exciting new Fl Fantasy Drive competition. Listed below, right, are eight groups of drivers racing in the 1996 Formula One season. Study the groups and enter a FI Fantasy Drive team to compete in the 15 grands prix taking place between March 31 and the end of the season for our £10,000 jackpot prize. You can enter at any time between now and noon on Thursday March 28 by selecting a total of eight drivers one from each of the eight groups, A to H, listed right.

Once you have chosen your team fill out the coupon, far right, making a careful note of the two-digit code printed in bold for each of your selections. Please keep this coupon safe, you will need it as a record of your entry. Next ring our 24-hour entry line on 0891 40 50 32 10044 990 100 332 in the Republic of freland). Calls last approximately five minutes. You will need a touchtone telephone to enter imost telephones with * and # keys are touchtone).

Follow the instructions on the entry line. You will be asked to nominate your eight (two-digit) selections in turn. You will then be asked to give your FI Fantasy Drive team name together with your own name, address, postcode and daytime telephone number. You will receive a 10-digit PIN number as a confirmation of your entry. Please keep a record of this with your team details.

Grand Prix at Interlagos on March 31 and details of a transfer system will be announced in due course, allowing you to change up to four members of your team to increase your chances of winning.

WIN A TRIP FOR TWO TO THE FRENCH GP Enter a FI Fantasy Drive team today and you could win a trip for two to the French Grand Prix at Magny-Cours on June 30. All entries received by noon on March 28 will enter the prize draw. The winner will be selected at random.

JACKPOT The player with the top FI Fantasy Drive team after the Japanese Grand Prix on October 13, 1996, wins

THE SCORING SYSTEM

 Qualifying points: scored by drivers qualifying for the start of each grand prix within the first 20 positions on the grid; Pale position 20 points: 2nd 19; 3rd 18; 4th 17; 5th 16; oth 15; 7th 14; 8th 13; 9th 12; 10th 11; 11th 10; 12th 9; 13th 8; 14th 7; 15th 5: 16th 5: 17th 4: 18th 3: 19th 2: 20th 1.

2) Finishing points: (as for qualifying points) scored by drivers for the top 20 positions at the end of every grand prix: ls: position 20 points; and in descending order to one point for

3) Lap points: one point is scored for each lap completed in a

4) Improved position points: three points are scored for each place improved from starting grid to finishing position in each

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1 Race results will be taken as those standing at midnight on the Sunday of each grand prix. 2 The rules of the FIA, as they affect The Times F1 Fantasy Drive, will apply in relation to points. 3 Changes of circumstance: if a driver is replaced, through death or injury, you will be deemed to have chosen the new dozer, if a driver transfers to another team you will keep that driver as your selection, in both instances the driver is eligible for transfer should you wish to exercise this option. 4 in the event of one or more entrants having the same score at the end of the competition a tie break will come into effect to decide the £10,000 prize winner. 5 in the event of more than one entrant having the same score for an individual race prize the winner will be selected

6 The computerised record of your entry will be considered to be the entry. 7 Normal Times Newspapers rules apply and the editor's decision is final.

Win VIP tickets to the British Grand Prix

THE WINNER of our Brazilian Grand Prix game on March 31 will win VIP hospitality for two, as guests of Jonathan Palmer, at the exciting British Grand Prix on Sunday, July 14 at Silverstone. Each place is worth £450 plus VAT. The winner and a partner will meet the former FI driver and BBC commentator from an FI mechanic you in the Juxurious surroundings of a new pavilion right beside Hangar Straight, the fastest part of the Silverstone circuit, winner, will also be a special guest.

Damon Hill's 1995 Formula I Williams will be present for guests to see at close quarters, complete with all the equipment to enable a pit stop to be performed. Following training will perform your own pit stop in teams, with prizes for the fastest.

All day catering includes a superb four-course lunch,

Johnny Herbert, last with free wine and tradiyear's British Grand Prix tional afternoon tea. A complimentary bar available throughout the day and you will be able to watch the race at the track_ide or on one of the cinema-style screens.

Besides Formula One, there is the exhilarating British Touring Cars, air displays by the Red Arrows and the Red Devils Parachute display. And when there is no racing there are parades of great cars and drivers.

TO BOOK FOR HOSPITALITY WITH JONATHAN PALMER DAY AT SILVERSTONE ON SUNDAY, JULY 14 PLEASE RING: 01403 733999

Radio 5 Live's John Inverdale tells Andrew Pierce how his first car went to blazes

Small fire in Lincoln: one reporter hurt

second birthday next Friday. John Inverdale, who hosts the Nationwide drive-time programme, is the station's most popular

His velvety but mischievious tones first came to prominence on Sports Report on Radio 2. The face behind the voice is on show each Sunday as presenter of BBC Television's Rugby Special. He is now to to be anchorman on Radio 5 Live's first national roadshow next week to celebrate the station's first two years.

When did you first learn to drive?

Driving my father around the bend in Gloucestershire, Within 10 minutes of my maiden voyage l had a blue flashing light whirring behind me dinanding that I pull over. I had indicated right and turned left when there was a police car directly behind us. They let me go when they knew ! was still wet behind the ears.

What was your first car?

A Cortina Mark II, which I bought for £200 and sold some months later for a new copy of the Alan Parsons Project album. I was lucky to get that for it, I was working on the Lincolnshire Echo on the early morning shift and abarlutely nothing was happening, I rang the fire brigade in the vain hope they might have a paragraph at least. All they had was a battered old Cortina on fire. I ran out of the office, past the cathedral, to where I had left it. My worst fears were confirmed. At least 25 per cent of it had gone up in flames when the petrol tank exploded.

What car do you drive now, and why?

A Vauxhall Astra. It is practical for London driving hut, if I am brutally honest, characterless and functional. which is why I loathe it.

Do you like driving?

Yes, Men I'm not in a rush. I hate it Old Trafford-style roar.

when I am. What I like best is driving holidays in places like South Africa or Ireland. All those long stretches of uncluttered roadways.

What is your most hated car?

The Volvo Estate. Once you have one you have booked your passport for middle age. I don't need one yet.

What is your dream car?

The E-type Jag. It is truly the only car ever made which has made me think: I want one. A man at my rugby club proudly showed off his new E-type last Friday. He had bought it for £36,000. I kicked a ball off the pitch into the car park by the side. It landed right in the middle of the bonnet.

What is your worst habit in the cor?

I always leave my briefcase open on the passenger seat so that I can pay bills and answer letters when I am stuck on the Marylebone Road, It is a disgraceand dangerous habit. But the Marylebone Road and the Westway are the two most odious pieces of tarmac I know. It is the only way I stay

What is the most unusual thing you have done in your car?

I filed a football match report for a station, which will be nameless -Lincoln City — from the car purporting to still be at the ground. I had the radio on in the background for sound effects. Forminately, the team was Boston United, so I did not have to produce an

Is it a saloon? Is it an estate? No, it's a Touring

The motor industry has a wonderful way with words. It is called autospeak. Carmakers have known how certain words conjure up an image in the minds of a potential buyer

Roadster, Cabriolet, Coupe (which is sometimes misused) Grand Tourer, and that old favourite of the 1940s and 1950s. de Luxe.

But when a manufacturer creates a car which is really neither fish nor fowl (in an automotive sense, of course), a new word may be needed or an old one resurrected. BMW first put the word "Touring" on the tailgate of a semi-estate car in 1971 and used it again in 1988 for a 3-series car. Now there is a 5-series Touring and the latest 3-series can also be had in Touring guise.

The concept is a car which has some pretensions to being an estate without carrying capacity being a priority and has been influenced by designers who want fluid lines and an attractive, up-market, nonutilitarian image but with a clear element of practicality.

BMW is not the only company offering this type of car. Rover has the 400 Tourer. Audi the A4 Avant and Mercedes-Benz's new C-class, which arrives here in the summer, also conforms to the type, although the company refers to it as an estate.

The problem with a car like the BMW 3-series Touring is that it could be seen as a compromise, unable to satisfy suspension.

In theory it should be spacious, but emerge from a supermarket, start piling in the plastic bags and the load area, with rear seats in place, fills up remarkably quickly: seemingly more so than with my own 3-series Coupe. BMW says the Touring has 13 cu ft of space to window level with the rear seats in place versus the Coupe's 14.3 cu ft and the saloon's 15.4 cu ft. But fold the maximum 46.6 cu ft to roof operation -- and there is a maximum 46.6 cu ft to roof fining level. However, the Coupe's seats also fold to give a through-loading capability. I've carried carpets and trestle tables without difficulty.

Another point to consider is the Touring's looks. Regarded as an estate, it is handsome, but, of course, it is not really an estate car, says BMW. It is certainly not as attractive as the Coupe, which in my biased) view is among the best looking cars on the road. But is the coupe really a coupe or just a two-door saloon?

eaving aside this business of what is or is not lin a name, what I can say is that the Touring has all the dynamic delights found in almost every BMW model. Driving it is always a pleasure, never a chore. There is a choice of petrol engines from 1.8 to 2.8 litres, plus a couple of diesels. I tried the 2.0 litre, 24valve 6-cylinder which is a real smoothie, remarkably flexible and gives the car good performance and fine economy po-tential of around 30 mpg. The five-speed manual gearbox is one of the best in the business for change quality, but a fivespeed automatic is an option at

Equipment levels on BMWs are now better than they used to be, but a radio is still an extra-cost item on the 320i Touring, as is a passenger

Assault on a battery speed challenge

new all-British attempt on the world land speed record is set to reunite three famous and historic names -Bluebird, Campbell and Pendine Sands. The Sussexbased team is aiming to smash the record for battery-powered vehicles by raising it to more than 200mph. The recordbreaker will use new technology which, according to its British backers, could revolutionise public acceptance of electric cars as a viable alternative.

The driver is to be Londonbased photographer Don Wales-Campbell, the latest in line of speed-obsessed Campbells who over three generations have between them broken nearly two dozen land and water speed records. Don's attempt will take place in early 1997, more than 70 years after his grandfather, Captain (later Sir) Malcolm Campbell, was first credited ith a new land speed record.

The occasion will also mark the 30th anniversary of the death of Don's uncle, also called Donald, who died while anempting to set a new world water speed record.

When he first broke the record, Malcolm Campbell was driving a huge 350 horsepower VI2-engined Sunbeam and he subsequently became famous for a whole series of record breakers, each of which he christened Bluebird. In all Sir Malcolm broke the land speed record nine times (by 1935 he had taken it to more than 300mph) and the water speed record another four.

ceeded on both land and water by his son Donald, who raised the land speed record to more than 400mph and captured the water speed record an incredible seven times. In 1967, while attempting to beat the latter once more, he was catapulted to his death in the Lake District. Yet another waterborne Campbell, Gina, later went on to set a new women's record.

Now Gina's cousin, Don Wales-Campbell, is preparing to wheel out the very latest in this long line of Bluebirds and to use it to win another outright speed record for the famous family. His vehicle is a slim, elegant wind-cheater that uses four liquid-cooled electric drives or pancake motors instead of sparks and pistons.

There is nothing new about using battery power to break records, and in the pioneering days of motoring the first record attempts all used electrity. In fact the early internal combustion engines barely got a look-in and until 1902 the world land speed record was held and broken by a succession of electric cars. The most famous was Camille

Jenatzy's cigar-shaped Jamais Contente, which managed a creditable 65.79mph. Even when the electric contenders were officially declared beaten, the car which finally managed to oust them was a French Serpollet powered not by petrol but by steam.

British record for electric vehicles is still only 110mph, the world record less than 190mph. The team is confident that the new Bluebird will exceed both and it could, they say, even reach 250mph. That may look somewhat modest alongside Richard Noble's st personic Thrust SSC project, but it offers them the opportunity to bring yet another famous name into the frame.

Precisely because the existing record for electric vehicles is comparatively low, the attempt can take place here in Britain. Noble and his team have had to decamp to the salt lakes of North America nowhere else can provide the necessary huge stretches of

on and the car's creator, Nelson Kruschandl, are particularly pleased to have been granted permission to use Pendine Sands because it was here that the Sunbeam driven by Don's grandfather first entered the record books at 150.87mph. It was also on Pendine Sands that one of Britain's most famous early record breakers, the Higham Special affectionately known as Babs, raced in the 1920s.

With a sophisticated aluminium centre section and a lightweight composite body. the new Bluebird is strikingly different from these mammoth pre-war record-breakers. As well as its featherweight construction and excellent aerodynamics, it uses innovative energy-transfer technology developed by Kruschandl's company, Refuellable Library Vehicles, to drive all four Refuellable Electric

His partner in REV, John Gould, is a former racing driver and something of a Campbell enthusiast. On his office wall he has the actual china Bluebirds that once graced the wall in Sir Malcolm's own study, so it is perhaps no coincidence that REV's patented system, called Wolverine refuelling, has been made available to the Bluebird team specifically for the record attempt

Kruschandl is confident, however, that his system has more far-reaching and practical applications than merely breaking records. He has already obtained financial backing from a major UK electricity supplier to develop his road-going version which, he believes, will offer the sort of range and performance reDR DASHBOARD

Sorry, we can't all go electric

There are two big prob-lems with electric vehicles: the weight of the batteries and their limited range.

But if an electric car can travel at 200mph, surely manufacturers can solve problems like that?

Designing a car for record-breaking wipes out one of those problems straight away. It means it only

But we've known about those problems for years. Why doesn't the Government encourage people to come up with a solution? That's a good question in

A this country. In France the government offers a £2,000 subsidy to purchasers of electric vehicles and in the US they can get income tax credits worth up to £2,700. The only incentive here is West-minster council's offer of a free parking place.

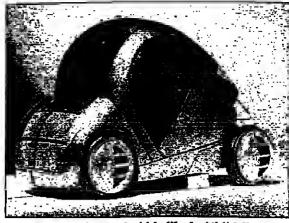

So who has made the greatest progress towards producing a proper electric ear? So who has made the Mercedes is working hard on the problem, so is General Motors. In France Peugeot/Citroen has been testing the Tulip, a plug-in electric car with a range of 50-60 miles and a speed of 45mph.

"Our Wolverine system uses normal lead-acid batteries in an enclosed cartridge," he says. "This runs the length of the vehicle and has been designed for easy removal." Replacing the spent cartridge with a new one could therefore be undertaken in a normal filling station without the massive expenditure needed to establish a network of new recharging stations. "By swapping cartridges the vehicle can in effect be refuelled in a couple of minutes, just as you would fill-up a normal petrol or diesel-powered family car. and using the existing infrastructure of roadside garages."

A second prototype is already being constructed to demonstrate how readily the system can be incorporated into a conventional family car. The Bluebird LSR attempt should provide a high-profile demonstration of this clever new technology.

Shaping up to the future of how Citroën will look

IS IT A bird? Is it a plane? No, it's a loaf of bread . . : or something. When design students are given their heads and told to draw the shapes of cars for the next century, they obviously throw out convention.

What they replace it with is a matter of conjecture, looking at designs entered by students from the Royal College of Art. Kevin Eason writes. They were asked by Citroen to produce "an imaginative and radical interpretation of the Citroen identity in the year 2010, contraying elements of French cultural values as well as an historical appreciation of the marque" where these designs fit into the daily grind of motoring around crowded streets, with the kids screaming in the back and the Sainsbury's carrier bags tipping over, depositing their contents all over the boot. Come to think of it, the experts could ask that too.

The RCA is probably the top breeding ground for car designers anywhere in the world - but what emerged from the styling exercise would have left most ordinary car buyers slightly more than baffled.
